Drought Cuts Wheat Crops; May Compel U. S. Imports

Experts Check Supply to Determine Needs for 1936-37.

World Carryover Smallest in Years

High Prices Are Feared if Nation Must Buy; Canada Suffers.

By Robert C. Albright.

Drought inroads on domestic grain crops, which yesterday carried private wheat estimates down to the bare normal consumption level, last night were being checked closely here by Bureau of Agricultural Economics experts, faced with a pessimistic world wheat situation surpassing any in years.

In a year which would have been propitious for farmers to break again into much-courted foreign markets—the total world wheat carryover is the smallest in nine years—it appeared that the United States must again import wheat in volume.

What is more significant, Canada, America's principal source of emergency wheat supplies, also is ravaged by drought, with more severe Canadian hot weather perils reported ahead.

Shortage Threat Denied.

Agriculture Department grain experts insisted there is no threat of an actual world wheat shortage, and that Canada, regardless of drought, still will have an adequate surplus. Nevertheless they were watching developments with a view to rising price and shifting supply implications.

While the Government's July 1 crop-forecasting figures will not be available for a week, private estimates yesterday cut the expected domestic output of spring and winter wheat to an average of 631,000,000 bushels, compared with a normal domestic consumption of about 632,000,000 bushels.

Although added to this will be a wheat carryover of about 125,000,000 bushels, the latter is the smallest domestic carryover since July 1, 1928, comparing with 152,000,000 bushels last year, and 393,000,000 bushels on July 1, 1933.

Shows No Surplus.

Experts also point out that the 125,000,000 bushels in carryover stocks in no sense represents a surplus, and it would be undesirable to cut into it to any great extent. This is regarded as a normal grain carryover, it being necessary to have old grain on hand while new grain is ageing.

The net result may be that the United States, one of the four normal surplus-producing nations, may be forced to import wheat at higher prices to the extent at least of the approximately 35,000,000 bushels which had to be brought in last year.

The price factor is one which the Administration, laying increasing emphasis in recent months on consumer demands, is watching with even more interest. The Bureau of Agricultural Economics observes that "prices in the United States in 1935-37 may be approximately as high relative to world prices as during the past three years, when the domestic crops were short." Informally, Government experts concede that this may result in slightly higher prices than last year, but contend the consumer may never feel it, in the price of bread, for example. They point out that repeal of processing taxes, which fractionally reflected itself in bread prices last year, should serve to offset the added cost of wheat. At all events, the effect on the consumer will depend on just how short the crop is.

Those farmers who are not hit by the drought, they point out, obviously will benefit by continued good prices, while those whose crops have deteriorated naturally will suffer. Were it not for the drought, they argue, farmers probably would have received 20 to 30 cents less for their wheat.

As parched Western drought regions were partly relieved in the last 24 hours by rains, general showers over wider areas were forecast by the Weather Bureau for today and extraordinary drought precautions continued to be taken by the Administration.

Developments were:

Legion Leaders Reverse Policy On School Oath

Taylor Hints Convention in Fall May Rally Against D. C. Red-Rider.

The American Legion has reversed its stand on teacher's oaths and compulsory salutes to the flag.

This about-face in policy was revealed to the National Education Association in convention at Portland, Oreg., by Frank Miles, who claimed he spoke for Ray Murphy, national commander of the legion.

It was confirmed in Washington last night by Col John Thomas Taylor, national legislative chairman of the veterans' organization, who intimated that a successful move would be made at the legion's national convention in September to oppose the Blanton anti-red rider and other bills aimed at the freedom of the teaching profession.

Miles, editor of the Iowa Legionnaire, assured the assembled teachers that support of the oath bills in State Legislatures was no longer a policy of the veteran's organization.

He said he had authorization of Murphy to say:

"Commander Murphy rightly believes that some of the sources agitating such legislation are as menacing to American democracy as the elements they profess to be attacking."

Col. Taylor explained he believed Murphy expressed the point of view of the majority of the Legion membership. He added that the fact that the national convention last year failed to reiterate its stand in favor of the teachers' oath bills, adopted by the 1934 convention, proved this.

"I don't think the attitude of the local department reflects the attitude of the Legion," he said. "There are a few Legionnaires in the District who see red under every table and behind every post. They make a lot of noise, but they are not, in my opinion, in the majority."

Fries Sees "Communists."

Maj. Gen. Amos A. Fries, retired chief of the Army's Chemical Warfare Division, who has taken a prominent part in the local department's support of the Blanton rider to outlaw the teaching of communism in the District schools, said last night:

"Miles is just a newspaper man. If he properly quoted the national commander, I have no sympathy with that kind of talk. People talk funny stuff sometimes. All this cry against teachers taking oaths is backed by the Communists.

"I think we should pass laws to punish the Communists the same as we do to punish murderers. I don't think Commander Murphy expresses the point of view of the majority in the Legion. I will fight any move in the organization to repeal the oath bills."

Teachers Heartened.

The teachers at the National Education Association meeting in Portland were greatly heartened by Miles' outspoken attitude. Many of them felt that this reversal of the Legion's policy would mean the

Roosevelt Pays CCC Tribute In Opening Shenandoah Park

Corps Should Have Pride in Work for U. S., He Says; Calls National Playgrounds True Conservation; In Charlottesville Today.

By Felix Bruner.
A Staff Correspondent.

Charlottesville, Va., July 3.—On a plateau high in the Blue Ridge Mountains, President Roosevelt this afternoon officially opened the East's newest playground, the Shenandoah National Park.

Speaking out of doors to an audience seated on benches and logs on a gentle slope forming a natural amphitheater, the President gave high tribute to the members of the Civilian Conservation Corps whose work in developing the park opened the great 180,000-acre area of picturesque mountains and valleys to the public.

The dedication ceremonies were at Big Meadows, a point midway of the Skyline Drive, the new scenic highway, which has been hewn out on the crest of the mountain range. Following the celebration, President Roosevelt came here to spend the

Zioncheck Ends Journey Home; Trial Set Here

'Show's Over,' He Says, but 18 File Against Him; Hearing Jan. 19.

Reunited with his wife, Representative Marion A. Zioncheck arrived home in Seattle yesterday while, across the continent in Washington, Judge Walter J. Casey was setting January 19 as the date of the lawmaker's hearing in Police Court on an assault charge.

In solemn mood, Zioncheck reached home soil in company with his 21-year-old wife, who had made a surprise flight westward from Baltimore and joined her husband on the train at a flag stop a few hours out of Seattle.

"The show's over," Zioncheck told several hundred greeters, according to the Associated Press, before rushing to the bedside of his mother, who is ill.

Developments, however, indicated otherwise. Eighteen of his constituents already have signified their intentions of competing for Zioncheck's seat in the House, to which he expects to be returned. Also, yesterday's action by Judge Casey means he must face the court—if he is re-elected.

Mrs. Benjamin Scott Young, the Zioncheckes' erstwhile landlady at Harvard Hall, appeared yesterday before Police Court officials to learn what had happened to her assault case against the Representative. Service of the warrant was obtained Monday just before the Washington Democrat was placed aboard a Seattle-bound train.

The result of Mrs. Young's visit was that Judge Casey continued the hearing of her complaint to January 19, two weeks after convening of the Seventy-fifth Congress. Previously the $25 collateral posted for Zioncheck's appearance Tuesday by Kenneth Romney, House sergeant

Woman Aviator Killed as Plane Burns, Crashes

Tentatively Identified as Mrs. Ruth Barron Nason, Noted Stunt Flier.

By the Associated Press.

Omaha, Nebr., July 3.—A woman flier believed by investigators to be Mrs. Ruth Barron Nason, of Rochester, N. Y., fell to her death in a blazing plane as she sought to land at the Municipal Airport late today. She was burned beyond recognition.

Authorities said identification was made through fragments of papers found in the wreckage.

As the plane circled over the field about 800 feet aloft it burst into flames and nosedived to the ground. Every part of the ship was burned except the motor and metal framework. Officers said they could not determine what caused the blaze.

The craft, a single-cabin monocoupe, appeared from the south as a passenger liner was arriving. Observers related the pilot circled the field, waiting for the liner to land. Omaha fliers said the ship was a "stranger" to this port and that it appeared to be a speedy craft, with "booted" wheels.

When it caught fire the ship was too low, observers said, for the pilot to attempt a parachute jump.

Among papers found in and about the ship, were a transport pilot's

Lobbyists to Wear Green Skull Caps, Senate in La. Votes

Baton Rouge, La., July 3 (AP).—The Louisiana Senate passed a bill today requiring lobbyists to wear "regulation" uniforms and divide with Senate members all funds over $10 a day they receive for lobbying.

The Senate tightened considerably an already drastic bill passed by the House.

The Senate also wrote into the bill amendments requiring all persons qualifying as lobbyists to "attach to their application certified checks in the sum of $1,000 payable to the fund known as the 'fund for the social entertainment of the senators which fund is hereby created."

The senators also provided that "all members shall have the right to withdraw said funds, upon their own warrants, provided that no senator shall withdraw more than $100 for each day."

"We are going to send this bill to the Governor," said one senator, "and if he vetoes it we'll over-ride him."

The bill provides that lobbyists of less than three years' experience wear green skull caps and gaudy plaid trousers of almost as many colors as the rainbow.

Fight Pledged By U. S. Steel Against Union

Irvin, Firm's Head, Says 'All Our Strength' Will Be Used in Drive.

Gorman Assails Major Parties in a Speech; Rallies Awaited.

By Sidney Olson.

The United States Steel Corporation declared war yesterday on the John L. Lewis Committee for Industrial Organization for its attempts to unionize the steel industry.

William A. Irvin, president of the mammoth $2,000,000,000 corporation, which employs nearly half of the 500,000 steel workers in the country, issued a pronouncement of the company's stand in the July U. S. Steel News, the second issue of the corporation's new house organ. He said, in part:

"We will resist with all our strength all efforts to impose such an organization upon our employes.

"Be not misled by the promises of false prophets who may appear in your midst for the sole purpose of creating discord and discontent for their own personal advantage.

"The United States Steel Corporation has always stood for the open shop and will continue to do so.

"It will never require employes to belong to any union in order to gain employment.

"Will Defend Right."

"On the contrary, it will defend their right to work, free from outside interference and coercion."

The phrase "resist with all our strength" was looked on as particularly significant by labor leaders here.

A call to arms for a "life and death" battle against the "steel barons" was sounded in New Haven, Conn., by Francis J. Gorman, first vice president of the United Textile Workers of America, last night, according to United Press dispatches.

Gorman, declaring that the New Deal had failed labor and that nothing could be expected from the "arch reactionary" Republican Party, urged labor to "go into the political arena and write its own platform." He said:

"We must mobilize. We must brook no interference in our drive from any source. Our lives, and the lives of our wives and children, depend on the success of the campaign to organize the unorganized in our basic industries."

Lewis Silent on Report.

John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers of America and chief of the Committee for Industrial Organization, heard in silence last night that the U. S. Steel Corporation would throw all its vast resources into the battle against unionization of its employes by the C. I. O.

"We expected it," he said. "No comment."

The U. S. Steel pronouncement, prepared in advance though it was, came almost as an answer yesterday to the challenge by Lewis and his committee the day before, when they announced completion of plans to follow through all the way toward unionization of the steel industry, and stated that any violence or unpleasantness would stem from the corporation management side, as no strike was planned.

Two hundred organizers have been sent into the steel towns by the C. I. O., and Philip Murray, director of the steel unionization program and vice president of the United Mine Workers, left yesterday for his Pittsburgh headquarters to speed the drive.

The attempt will be made to bring the steel workers into the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers of North America, one of the oldest unions of the American Federation of Labor.

Murray stated that "the big push" will begin tomorrow with rallies at Homestead, Pa., and Chicago. Thomas Kennedy, secretary of the miners' union and Lieutenant Governor of Pennsylvania, will speak at Homestead, where there was bloodshed and rioting at a steel strike in 1892.

An unofficial report yesterday held that the executive council of the A. F. of L. is split 9 to 6 in favor of expulsion of Lewis from the federation.

The industrial union vs. craft union issue will come up next Wednesday. Lewis and his 12 aids, each head of a powerful union, who met day before yesterday here, stated at that time they did not even intend to appear at the July 8 meeting to answer the charges of dual unionism. Lewis' statement

U. S. Balloon Race Starts at Denver; One Entry Is Out

By the Associated Press.

Denver, July 3.—The twenty-fourth annual National Balloon Races got under way here late tonight under ideal weather conditions which followed a brief windy flurry that ripped a hole in the Detroit entry, eliminating it.

The United States Army bag, piloted by Capt. Anton Haynie McCormick, was the first to cast off. It rose at 9:46 p. m. (mountain standard time) and floated northeastward in a slight breeze.

Second to go aloft was the first of two United States Navy balloons entered, piloted by Lieut. Comdr. Francis H. Gilmer. The Goodyear bag, from Akron, Ohio, piloted by Frank A. Trotter, winner of the 1930 race; the Navy's second balloon, under command of Lieut. R. F. Tyler, and the Cleveland bag, piloted by Milford S. Vanik, followed.

100,000 Due For Capital's Holiday Fete

Fireworks Display at Monument Tonight on Program.

Forecast Generally Fair With Possibility of Afternoon Rain.

With booming salutes and blaring bands, patriotic oratory and picnics, motor jaunts to the country and rockets trailing flaming fingers across the sky, the Nation today will observe the 160th anniversary of its birth.

The part Washington will play in the celebration of Independence Day will be quiet and inconspicuous.

President Roosevelt will be away from the White House, delivering an address at the historic home of Thomas Jefferson, in Monticello, Va. Most of the members of the cabinet and others high in official life were out of the city.

Private use of fireworks, as usual, was barred here, but the Capital looked forward to the spectacular display scheduled to take place on the Monument grounds. Arrangements have been completed to accommodate up to 100,000 persons.

Elsewhere in the United States, however, wherever the laws do not interfere, the "glorious Fourth" of yesteryear will be repeated, with crackling firecrackers and inflated paper balloons zig-zagging their red-white-and-blue colors across the sky.

Thousands Leave City.

Thousands of Government workers had left Washington last night to begin their vacations or to spend the holiday week-end with the folk back home. Into Washington, however, had come other thousands of tourists, intent on celebrating Independence Day in the Nation's Capital.

The District and nearby Maryland and Virginia will have generally fair weather early today, but scattered thundershowers were predicted for this afternoon officials at the Weather Bureau said.

Chairman C. Melvin Sharpe announced that the entire program will be presented providing it is not raining at 7 p. m. tonight, 15 minutes before the exercises are scheduled to begin.

Cites Precedence.

Sharpe was optimistic about the chances for fine weather and recalled that the Capital has had a clear evening on the Fourth of July for the last ten years. There was a light rain on Independence Day in 1932, but the skies cleared in plenty of time for the program to be carried out on the Monument grounds.

"If we should have bad luck this year," said the chairman of the Fourth of July committee, "the tickets bought for Saturday night will be honored for the display of fireworks Monday night."

With the exception of the office of National Capital Parks, other groups which had scheduled Independence Day celebrations went ahead with their plans, hoping the weatherman would be wrong. The parks office, however, canceled a tour of historic forts in and about Washington because of the threat of rain.

The tour will be held Sunday, July 19, and will follow the same 38-mile route planned for today.

In addition to the elaborate celebration on the Monument Grounds expected to attract 100,000 persons, several organizations, including the Association of Oldest Inhabitants, the Citizens Association of Takoma Park, the American University Park Citizens Association and the Citizens of Greater Northeast Washington, have planned programs for earlier in the day.

The Oldest Inhabitants will begin their traditional gathering at the old Union Engine House, Nineteenth and H streets, at 10 a. m. with William McK. Clayton as principal speaker.

Rain or no rain, the Takoma Park Citizens Association will not be cheated out of the parade scheduled to start at 9:30 this morning from Chestnut, Eastern and Takoma avenues. The committe in charge has announced that in the event of wet weather today the procession will march at 6 p. m. on the first clear evening after Sunday. The same procedure will be used for fireworks, to be shot at 8 p. m.

Leo A. Rover, former United States attorney for the District of Columbia, will deliver a patriotic oration at 11 a. m. from a stand at Denwood, Philadelphia and Maple avenues. The address and accompanying program will be given in the auditorium of the Philadelphia Avenue School in case of rain.

Following the morning parade

Ex-Sailor Admits Aiding Japanese; Convicted as Spy

Guilty of Espionage

HARRY T. THOMPSON.

Thompson Found Guilty in 10 Minutes After He Confesses.

Case First of Kind In History of U. S.

Possible Sentence of 20 Years to Be Given on Monday.

By the Associated Press.

Los Angeles, July 3.—A former yeoman, Harry Thomas Thompson, was convicted speedily today of selling confidential United States Fleet information to a Japanese secret agent—a case unprecedented in Navy and War Department history.

After he had admitted boarding battleships and supplying "clippings" for a Japanese who paid him "about $700" in salaries, the curly-haired Thompson was found guilty of conspiracy to commit espionage by a Federal jury which deliberated ten minutes.

Thompson, whose trial began yesterday, will be brought to court Monday to be sentenced. A maximum term of 20 years is possible.

(Thompson, a native of Howard County, Md., lived for some time in Baltimore.)

He was indicted with a man identified as Toshio Miyazaki, a lieutenant commander of the Imperial Japanese Navy. The Japanese government has confirmed that a man of that name is a member of its naval college, but pointed out the name is a common one in that country.

Reached on First Ballot.

The verdict was reached on the first ballot.

Thompson heard the verdict without change of expression.

He was his only witness and the court told the jury "your quick verdict indicates that you consider his defense preposterous."

Thompson's defense was that he acted merely as a "clipping bureau" for Miyazaki, who was enrolled at Stanford University during 1934 and 1935 as an observer.

Thompson on the witness stand talked freely of his association with Miyazaki and of boarding United States battleships, but denied he stole valuable secret papers on board.

On the witness stand, he also admitted that from June, 1934, to May, 1935—the period the Government charges he was guilty of espionage acts—he received "about $700."

"During that time were you otherwise employed?" he was asked.

"No," the pink-cheeked defendant replied.

Resigned Service.

Thompson admitted writing the following letter of "resignation:"

"My dear Mr. Tannie: I respectfully request that this letter be treated as my resignation from the service of your country and the country which I have been serving. It is with the greatest reluctance and regret that I tender this resignation to the Japanese government, as I can only state I have enjoyed every moment I have spent in the service of your country, and I hope all the information that has come to you through me has amply repaid for the salary sent me.

"This resignation is to take effect as on the date of our last meeting, namely, October 12, 1934. It is of my own doing and free will and for the safeguard of my own person, and has nothing to do with anything you or your country has done or would do. With saying goodby, I send you my heartiest congratulations and the sincere hope that anything you may undertake will prove of a successful nature.

"(Signed)
"HARRY THOMAS THOMPSON."

U. S. Completes Case.

In testimony splashed with sensations and high-lighted by the appearance of Thompson's Japanese "errand girl," these were the Government's salient points:

1. The Japanese consul at Los Angeles was named as one of two men with whom Thompson attempted to communicate after he was arrested by Navy Intelligence officers.

2. A picture of Toshio Miyazaki, whom the Government asserts was the secret agent employing Thompson, was identified by two Stanford University students, and an employe of the Yokohama Specie Bank at San Francisco.

3. The handwriting on a check drawn by Miyazaki and that on a letter sent to Thompson telling him his salary would be in-

Jewish Writer Dies in Protest Against Nazis

Reporter Suicide in League Assembly; War Danger Scored by Woman.

By the Associated Press.

Geneva, July 3.—Death climaxed tonight a dramatic pistol shot of protest, fired in the Assembly of the League of Nations.

Stefan Lux, Czechoslovakian Jewish newspaperman, died tonight of the bullet wound he inflicted in the Assembly hall today while statesmen expounded this proposal and that to ward off European war.

An internal hemorrhage, caused by the wound just above his heart, proved fatal.

Lux fired the shot into his chest while standing in the gallery adjoining the benches of the delegates, and slid to the floor.

He gasped to a colleague, "I want to die as a public protest to the way Germany is treating Jews. I am not sorry. My mind is completely lucid."

Statesmen jumped to their seats at the sound of the shot, fearing an attempt had been made at assassination. Some of them shouted, but Premier Paul van Zeeland, presiding, told them, "Gentlemen, let us continue."

A little later, Sweden's white-haired woman delegate, Kirstin Hesselgren, first representative of her sex to address the Assembly as a delegate, voiced what she called the anguish of the women of all nations.

"Why bear children into a world so hopeless and so insecure?" she asked.

Speedy Reform Asked.

France, through Foreign Minister Yvon Delbos, called for speedy League reform to provide for reinforced, League-supervised regional pacts, for measures to assure swift and armed punishment for aggression.

Lux's pistol shot rang out during the translation of a speech by Augusto Barcia, the Spanish foreign minister.

Standing near him was Helen Kirkpatrick, of New York and Rochester, N. Y., who is attached to the American Research Center here. She said she thought at first the explosion was a photographer's flashlight.

Just before he fired, Lux cried out: "This is the end, it is all over!"

Dr. Augusto Vastoncellos, of Portugal, former Assembly president and a distinguished physician, administered first aid and Lux was taken out to a hospital, asking feebly for "my brief case."

In the brief case, League officials found letters addressed to King Edward and Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden of England, and to J. A. C. Avenol, secretary general of the League.

The latter apologized for the incident.

Surgeons found two bullets in Lux's lungs although he had fired

Slain Beauty's Diary Reveals 'Drunks;' Brunette Is Elusive

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, July 3.—A strange game of "hide and seek" tonight confronted police seeking the attractive brunette wanted for questioning in the hotel room slaying of "Pint-a-Day" Audrey Vallette, 31, cafe beauty.

Miss Vallette died of a single bullet wound through the breast yesterday, ending a pursuit of pleasure in near North Side haunts which a diary she left hebhind disclosed started several months ago. The rumsoaked account of her convivial "dates" ended frequently with the phrase "Was I drunk!".

Hunted as a key witness was Mrs. Ruth Freed, night club hostess, police said they had identified as a visitor to Miss Vallette's room shortly before she telephoned the hotel deskman. "I've been shot."

The "hide and seek" centered around Mrs. Freed and her husband, Edward, partner in the "Nut House," a North Clark street gay spot, and described by police as an admirer of Audrey Vallette.

The Daily Times in a copyrighted story said Mrs. Freed had been located in a South Side hideout, but that she refused to surrender until "I see Eddie."

"Eddie," the paper said, referred to Edward Freed, her husband.

He, Police Capt. Andrew Berry said, was "in hiding because he fears his wife. He knows she has a pistol."

While police scurried about trying to locate her, Mrs. Freed, the Times said, told an interviewer in a tavern

Miss Frink Drops $100,000 Suit With Apology to Helen Hayes

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, July 3.—Helen Hayes, diminutive star of stage and screen, emerged a victorious heroine tonight in a real life drama that cast her as defendant in her first court role on or off the stage.

A $100,000 suit that charged her with alienating the affections of her husband, Playwright Charles MacArthur, from his first wife, Carol Frink, was dropped in Cook County Circuit Court before the tiny actress had entered one word of defense.

Three times the plaintiff offered to drop the case before the defense accepted.

Miss Hayes, her attorneys said, insisted on fighting on until MacArthur's first mate took back all the "nasty" things she said about "Charlie"—those wisecracks about hocking his mother-in-law's diamond ring, and "lying on the beach getting healthy" while Miss Frink worked, and making love by stepping on her feet and moving from apartment to apartment because "the bed was too small for his feet."

Not only did Miss Frink say—through her attorney, Sam Golan—that she was sorry for those remarks, but she went further.

"It is Miss Frink's belief," said Attorney Golan, "that there was no malice whatsoever on the part of Helen Hayes when she became engaged to MacArthur.

Articles in movie magazines were the sole basis for the "heart balm" action, he went on, and Miss Frink had let the suit go to trial "without thought of getting a cent" but

25 Known Dead As Texas Flood Ravages Valley

Swollen Guadalupe River Forces Evacuation of Victoria Region.

By the Associated Press.

Cuero, Tex., July 3.—The flood-swollen Guadalupe River rolled seaward tonight, ravaging crops and property in its two-mile-wide path, as lowland families, amply warned of the onrushing waters, fled to the safety of the higher ground.

Twenty-five were known dead, some still missing, cotton and corn crops battered to the earth and an estimated $3,500,000 damage done as the Guadalupe spent itself near the costal region.

Two hundred families in the Victoria region evacuated lowland homes as the river coursed over rich farming land. An estimated 100 houses were in its path.

3 Still Missing.

Three persons still were missing. A coast guard plane, equipped with two-way radio, cruised over the Thomaston area in search of Bob Murphree, a Thomaston farmer who went into flooded fields 48 hours ago to bring out a tractor. He was believed stranded on a bridge.

Unconfirmed reports said either Oscar or August Wedemier, prominent ranchmen, was missing and that Mack Mumphord, a colored tenant, had been downed.

The death list mounted to 25 when the bodies of G. Martinez and his 15-year-old son, Bastina, were washed up near a power dam 5 miles below Gonzales.

One-Fifth Total Loss.

One-fifth of Victoria's richest farming area was a total loss. Inestimable crop and livestock losses were suffered in the wide area from Gonzales to the coast. Thousands of head of livestock were drowned and a survey showed at least 400,000 acres of farm land under water.

Rail and highway traffic was at a standstill in the Victoria section.

Strangely, Gonzales farmers who suffered heavy damage when 15 inches of rain sent the Guadalupe pouring over their crops wanted more rain today. It was the general belief that another inch or two of precipitation would wash silt from cotton and corn crops left standing.

Warnings, printed in both English and Spanish, were dropped from airplanes in isolated coastal sections, notifying farmers to evacuate their flood-menaced homes.

Father Is Accused In Child Poisoning

Norwich, N. Y., July 3 (AP).—Coroner L. W. Abbamonte today ordered Edward Angle held on a charge of first-degree murder in the deaths of Angle's two infant children of what the coroner said was poison.

Angle was remanded to jail to await grand jury action. His attorney, James Coleman, did not seek bail for his client.

The children—Laura, aged 2, and her 1-year-old brother, Louis—died with convulsions in Norwich Hospital two weeks ago, three hours after they had eaten their breakfast.

Dr. Abbamonte said there were traces of a strong poison in their stomachs, discovered after an autopsy and a toxicologist's examination.

The children were Angle's by his second wife. Four others by his first wife were not sick.

District Attorney Glen Carter said he had questioned both Angle and his wife frequently during the past two weeks but that no charges had been brought against either of them.

Angle had been in custody since Wednesday.

Farm Tax Boosts Nebraska Balance

Lincoln, Nebr., July 3 (AP).—Debtless Nebraska cast up its annual accounts today and credited improved farm tax payments with boosting its treasury balance by more than $1,000,000.

Deputy State Treasurer H. J. Murray said the balance July 1 in all State cash and investment funds was $20,728,557. A year ago the balance was $19,720,065. An additional $893,373 in Federal aid, highway and social security funds also was in the treasury.

Murray said an improvement in tax payments by farmers helped the State increase its balance. He said the State has $13,747,005 invested in bonds for permanent school and soldiers' aid funds.

The cash balance of $6,981,551 was $1,123,069 more than a year ago. He reported a decrease from $1,403,283 last year to $630,724 this year in the State's general fund, but said this was due to the payment of emergency appropriations by the 1935 Legislature, for which 1935 taxes are just beginning to arrive.

Politics and People

Morgenthau's Report of Financial State of Nation Packs a Jolt.

By Franklyn Waltman

SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY HENRY MORGENTHAU, JR., concluded his report on the fiscal condition of the country the other night by asserting that "we may derive real encouragement and satisfaction from these facts: National income is rising; as a result, Federal revenue is increasing; Federal expenditures are on the decline, and the Nation's business is continuing to show steady improvement."

WALTMAN.

It is to be expected that Secretary Morgenthau would put his best foot forward and undertake to make as palatable as possible the results of New Deal financial operations. Yet there are some who cannot swallow without gagging, despite all the sugar-coating, some of the facts contained in the Morgenthau report.

When Mr. Morgenthau asserted that "Federal expenditures are on the decline," he must have shocked some of his radio audience, for only a few minutes previously he had revealed that Federal expenditures for the fiscal year which ended last Tuesday night totaled $8,880,000,000 and that sum was $1,504,000,000 more than was expended in the previous fiscal year.

What Mr. Morgenthau did not tell the Nation was that the Federal Government in the last fiscal year spent more money than in any fiscal year since 1919, which included the bulk of the heavy costs of fighting the World War.

Nor did Mr. Morgenthau point out that the total for the last fiscal year represented the third successive record peace-time expenditure for the Government—even though the New Deal claims to have brought back recovery and ended the depression.

Expenditures in the fiscal year 1933—the deepest point of the depression—totaled $5,143,000,000; in 1934—the first full New Deal fiscal year—the sum was $7,105,000,000; in 1935 it was $7,376,000,000 and now for 1936 the figure of $8,880,000,000 is revealed.

Thus, during the three fiscal years controlled by the New Deal, the Treasury has disbursed $23,361,000,000, including debt retirement payments, or less than the total expended in the previous five fiscal years—two of which covered the depression period.

In the three New Deal fiscal years statutory debt retirement totaled $1,337,000,000, leaving new expenditure in that period of $22,024,000,000 or more than $20,000,000 every 24 hours—Sundays and holidays included—in the period. The average 35-day expenditure for that period was equal to the total disbursed by the Treasury in all of 1916—the year we entered the World War and began thinking in terms of billions.

Secretary Morgenthau in regard to the last fiscal year's expenditure of $8,880,000,000, points out that it included $1,723,000,000 necessitated by the premature payment of the soldiers' bonus. This is a pertinent fact in explanation of the expenditures. But it is irrelevant from the bookkeeper's viewpoint why sums are expended. He is interested only in the total.

On the assumption, however, that this represents a nonrecurring item, it might for purposes of argument, be deducted from the total expenditures, thus leaving $7,157,000,000 as the figure for all other expenditures. But there should be added to that figure $100,000,000 representing the normal annual contribution to the soldiers' bonus sinking fund.

And it might also be noted that in the last fiscal year payments for debt retirement totaled but $403,000,000, whereas the comparable sum in the previous year was $574,000,000, or $171,000,000 more, and the sum required by the budget was $552,000,000. If these adjustments are made, then, excluding the cash payment of the bonus, last year's expenditures would total $7,406,000,000, or $30,000,000 more than in the previous year.

Of course in tabulating expenditures it makes no difference why the money is spent. It has become the custom to explain Treasury deficits by citing extraordinary and allegedly nonrecurring items. Several years ago it was relief; now it's the bonus; next year it may be flood and drought control, and the year after pensions. The point is that the money is being spent in larger and larger sums.

Indeed, the Treasury Department's official tabulation reveals that the so-called ordinary expenses of the Federal Government are more serious and harder to cope with than the so-called extraordinary expenses. Under the heading "total general" expenses the sum of $4,155,000,000 is given for the 1935 fiscal year and $6,075,000,000 is given for the last fiscal year—an increase of $1,920,000,000.

Included in the 1936 figure is the bonus payment. Thus, if $1,623,000,000 (the added sum made necessary by Congress' overriding of the veto) is deducted the increase for last year over the previous year would be $197,000,000. If there is added to that the $149,000,000 deferred debt retirement payment, the result would be an increase of $346,000,000—in "general" expenses over last year.

Perhaps most disturbing about the entire budget picture is that so-called departmental expenses of the Federal Government last year were $219,000,000 greater than in the previous year and expenditures for national defense were $230,000,000. The latter is a figure which will grow. Evidence of that is found in the fact that $151,000,000 more was appropriated for national defense for the current fiscal year than was spent in the last 12 months.

Of course appropriations for a given year do not always represent actual expenditures. This is well illustrated by the figures regarding relief of the unemployed. New Dealers make much of the fact that Congress last month appropriated only $1,425,000,000 for relief and work relief and, pointing to previous appropriations of $4,800,000,000 and $3,300,000,000, seek to give the impression that a wholesale retrenchment is being made in that direction.

But Chairman Buchanan, of the House Appropriations Committee is too forthright a man to permit such a deception to gain currency. In an explanation of appropriations in one of the post-session editions of the Congressional Record, he points out that this sum "is not indicative of the amount that will be available for expenditure for employment purposes in the fiscal year to commence July 1, 1936."

He explained that to the $1,425,000,000 sum should be added $308,000,000 for the CCC, $369,410,000 for general public works, $300,000,000 for PWA and $1,000,000,000 left over from the previous year's appropriation, making in all $3,402,000,000. Mr. Buchanan adds that if other available funds are included "it is reasonable to anticipate that the total amount for employment purposes to be available in the fiscal year 1937 will be not less than $3,600,000,000."

If to those figures are added the sums available for expenditure on other purposes this year, the total is $8,400,000,000 or only $400,000,000 less than the total spent this year—including the bonus—and, as usual, when Congress returns in January it will boost the sum available for this year through deficiency appropriations. And Mr. Morgenthau thinks we should be encouraged by the "decline" in Federal expenditures!

Motor Carriers Get U.S. Draft Of Safety Rules

ICC Asks Suggestions of Drivers for Code Under Recent Act.

By the Associated Press.

The Federal Government took a broad step in the field of highway safety yesterday with issuance by the Interstate Commerce Commission of tentative safety regulations for vehicles subject to the 1935 motor carrier act.

Issued by the Motor Carrier Bureau, the projected regulations will be circulated among truck and bus operators engaged in interstate commerce for their criticism.

Later the full commission will consider views of motor operators in drafting final rules.

Designed primarily to affect common and contract motor carriers, the proposed regulations also could be extended to apply to private motor carriers engaged in interstate commerce.

John L. Rogers, head of the Motor Bureau, said he wanted "the views of interested parties as to the propriety" of making the rules applicable to private carriers, which are those used by their operators for their own purposes.

Approximately 300,000 common and contract carriers would be affected by the regulation, which the Motor Carrier Bureau said may be expected to promote greater safety over the whole field of motor vehicle operation.

Among the proposed regulations were the following:

No motor vehicles should be driven at a speed "greater than is reasonable and prudent," and any speed in excess of 45 miles per hour "shall be prima facie evidence that the speed is not reasonable or prudent."

Drivers must thoroughly inspect their vehicles before each trip.

Motor vehicles must be driven upon the extreme right side of the highway "so far as practicable."

Vehicles transporting passengers, explosives, inflammable liquids or poisonous gases must be brought to a full stop at railroad crossings.

Vehicle lights must be displayed from one-half hour after sunset to one-half hour before sunrise.

Accidents must be reported.

Vehicles must not be fuled with the engine running.

at arms, had been ordered forfeited. The forfeiture order was revoked yesterday.

Aggressive defender of the Seattle Representative who broke out of Sheppard and Enoch Pratt Sanitarium, near Baltimore, last Sunday, Romney disclosed yesterday that he has advised Zioncheck to sue Northwest Airlines for refusing to fly him from Chicago to his home city.

"I explained to the airline officials that the reservation I made was for Zioncheck and they assured me he would receive every consideration," said the sergeant at arms. "They put him out of the plane after taxiing around the field for photographs and publicity. They will get plenty of publicity, all right, but it will be adverse."

Mrs. Zioncheck, who is also facing service of an assault warrant sworn out by Mrs. Young as the result of an altercation in the Harvard Hall apartment, which the older woman had sublet to the Congressional couple, booked passage on a Central Airlines plane as "Mrs. Drake." She left Wednesday night, arriving in Seattle about 24 hours later. Then she motored to Ellenburg, 130 miles east of Seattle, to join her husband on the train.

"My wife's arrival on the train was the biggest surprise I expect to have," her husband said yesterday. "They lied to my wife and poisoned her mind against me," the Associated Press quoted him as saying.

He was rushed into a waiting auto by six husky men. Earlier, however, he had confided that he has gubernatorial aspirations. Meanwhile, Chester J. Chastek, a candidate for the Republican nomination for Representative, had issued the following statement addressed to Zioncheck.

"You should refrain from entering the contest (for the Democratic nomination). Your playboy activities would cloud the issues of a very serious campaign with horseplay."

For his part, Zioncheck said he'd have no more statements or interviews. He was going to take things easy, he said, thought there might be a "Zioncheck Zpper" or two.

"That asylum affar," came a parting shot, "was a drty political plot to get me out of Congress and out of the newspapers until after the national convention. What's more they expected to keep me chained and shackled in the place until it would be too late to file for reelection."

Text of President's Address

Big Meadows, Va., July 3 (AP).—The text of the address delivered today by President Roosevelt at the dedication of Shenandoah National Park follows:

The creation of this park is one part of our great program of husbandry—the joint husbandry of our human resources and our natural resources. In every part of the country, local and State and Federal authorities are engaged in preserving and developing our heritage of natural resources; and in this work they are equally conserving our priceless heritage of human values by giving to hundreds of thousands of men the opportunity for making an honest living.

The product of the labor of the men of the Civilian Conservation Corps, who have opened the Shenandoah National Park to the use and enjoyment of our citizens, is as significant as though, instead of working for the Government, they had worked in a mill or a factory. They have a right to be as proud of their labor here as if they had been engaged in private employment.

Seeking to End Waste.

In by-gone years we have seen the terrible tragedy of our ages—the tragedy of waste; waste of our people, waste of our land. It was neither the will nor the destiny of our nation that this waste of human and material resources should continue. That was the compelling reason that led us to put our idle people to the task of ending the waste of our land.

The involuntary idleness of thousands of young men ended three years ago when they came here to the camps of the Blue Ridge. Since then they have not been idle; and today they have ended the idleness of the Shenandoah National Park. It will be a busy and useful place in the years to come, just as the work of these young men will, I am confident, lead them to busy and useful lives in the years to come.

Our country will need many other young men as they come to manhood for work like this—for other Shenandoahs.

Is it a dream—will I perhaps be accused of an exaggerated passion for planning if I paint for you a picture? You who are here know of the great usefulness to humanity which this Skyline Drive achieves from now on, of the greater usefulness which its extension, south through Virginia and North Carolina to the Big Smoky National Park, will achieve.

Similar Needs Elsewhere.

In almost every other part of the country there is a similar need for recreational areas for parkways which will give to men and women of moderate means the opportunity, the invigoration and the luxury of touring and camping amid scenes of great natural beauty.

All across the Nation at this time of the year people are starting out for their vacations in national and State parks. They will put up at roadside camps or pitch their tents under the stars, with an open fire to cook by, with the smell of the woods and the wind in the trees. They will forget the rush and the strain of all the other long weeks of the year, and for a short time, at least, the days will be good for their bodies and good for their souls. Once more they will lay hold of the perspective that comes to men and women who every morning and every night can lift up their eyes to Mother Nature.

There is merit for all of us in the ancient tale of the giant Antaeus who, every time he touched his Mother Earth arose with strength renewed a hundredfold.

This park, therefore, together with its many sisters which are coming to completion in every part of our land, is in the largest sense a work of conservation. Through all of them we are maintaining useful work for our young men. Through all of them we are enriching the character and the happiness of our people.

We seek to pass on to our children a richer land—a stronger nation.

I, therefore, dedicate Shenandoah National Park to this and succeeding generations of Americans for the recreation and for the re-creation which we shall find here.

Roosevelt Pays CCC Tribute

night. Tomorrow morning he will speak at Monticello, near here, the old home of Thomas Jefferson.

Leaving Washington by automobile in a downpour of rain, the Presidential party found perfect weather when it reached the mountains. The waiting crowd gave the President a great cheer as guns of the Virginia National Guard boomed out the Presidential salute.

Mr. Roosevelt's car passed between solid lines of CCC boys and national guardsmen as it approached the meeting. It was CCC day, a day on which the President and the country were to recognize one of the organization's proudest achievements.

Call Park Significant.

"The product of the labor of the men of the Civilian Conservation Corps who have opened the Shenandoah National Park to the use and enjoyment of our citizens," Mr. Roosevelt said, "is as significant as though instead of working for the Government they had worked in a mill or a factory. They have a right to be as proud of their labor here as if they had been engaged in private employment."

The President indicated he expected to keep up the work of the CCC in the future.

"Our country," he said, "will need many other young men as they come to manhood for work like this—for other Shenandoahs."

Describing the great usefulness of the Skyline Drive as a recreation spot, and the plan for extending it through Virginia and North Carolina to the Great Smoky National Park, Mr. Roosevelt continued:

"In almost every other part of the country there is a similar need for recreational areas for parkways which will give to men and women of moderate means the opportunity, the invigoration and the luxury of touring and camping amid scenes of great natural beauty."

He continued:

"This park, therefore, together with its many sisters which are coming to completion in every part of our land, is in the largest sense a work of conservation. Through all of them we are preserving the beauty and the wealth of the hills, and the mountains and the plains and the trees and the streams. Through all of them we are maintaining useful work for our young men. Through all of them we are enriching the character and happiness of our people.

"We seek to pass on to our children a richer land—a stronger Nation."

It was a picturesque scene as the President spoke. The gay summer costumes of the crowd, which included a generous amount of the olive drab of the CCC, was set off by the green of the grass. As a background were the ghostly white trunks of chestnut trees which long ago had been killed by a blight.

To reach Big Meadows the Presidential party drove for miles over the Skyline Drive, which afforded frequent glimpses of wide green and brown valleys, flowering mountain sides and summits among the clouds. About 10 miles south of Panorama, where the drive starts, the party stopped for a picnic lunch on a spot which gave a view of the broad expanse of the Shenandoah Valley.

As the President came upon the platform which had been prepared for him, the strains of "Hail to the Chief" played by the Marine Band echoed from the surrounding trees. His voice ringing beneath the dome of the sky, the Right Rev. Henry St. George Tucker, bishop of Virginia, delivered the invocation.

Presiding was Wilbur C. Hall, chairman of the Virginia State commission on conservation and development. He introduced Secretary of the Interior Ickes, whose department will administer the park, after issuing a challenge to the East to compete with the West in the development of national parks.

Ickes pointed out that whatever may have been the virtues of the pioneer, he was lacking in foresight as to the needs of future generations and failed to set aside areas of outdoor interest and natural beauty for the benefit of his descendants.

"Consider," he said, "what it would mean to the country today if that master exhibitionist, Niagara Falls, with its original surrounding forests, had been set aside as a national park before its beauty and charm and inspiration had been whittled down to a minimum by private enterprise that could see in one of the greatest wonders of nature in all the earth only an opportunity to make a present profit."

Ickes said that he wished the National Government might be more liberal than it has been in establishing national parks. He said the total cost to the Government of all the lands it has bought for national parks and monuments has been less than five cents per capita. For park roads and trails, he said, it has been less than 62 cents per capita.

Speaks to Virginians.

Speaking directly to Virginians, he said:

"I wish that every citizen of the United States might be able to visit the patriotic shrines with which Virginia abounds. On the basis of my own personal experience, I can say that no person brought up in the Northern tradition can have, short of a personal visit, the slightest conception of the treasures of patriotic and historic interest that Virginia possesses. The grace, the charm and the culture of Virginia life, however fully it may be set forth on the printed page, is, in fact, almost a closed book without such a contact.

"To the citizens and officials of the State of Virginia I gladly pay my tribute for the leadership that they have so understandingly taken to preserve what is notable in the historic background of our country. Thanks to your efforts and your vision, America is no longer a land without significant historical landmark to point out its progress as a Nation. This State is demonstrating that we have a great and honorable past upon which, with renewed confidence, we may proceed to build an ever greater and more honorable future."

The crowd cheered when Ickes praised the efforts of Virginia's two Senators, Carter Glass and Harry Flood Byrd, in the interest of conservation.

Peery Praises Ickes.

President Roosevelt was introduced by Gov. George C. Peery, who declared that "the people of Virginia are deeply grateful to Secretary Ickes and to the Administration for the establishment of this wonderful park."

Present in the speaker's stand were two former Governors, Senator Byrd and E. Lee Trinkle. Members of the Virginia Legislature and State officials also were present.

President Roosevelt's party made only one stop between Big Meadows and Charlottesville. At a crossroad were gathered the pupils of the Blue Ridge Industrial School. The President stopped while they sang him a song. He smiled and waved his greetings. Upon arrival here the President went to the Farmington Country Club for the night. His arrival temporarily interrupted the Virginia State amateur golf tournament which was being played at the club.

In the Presidential party were Mrs. Roosevelt, Postmaster General Farley, Secretary Ickes and H. Walton Moore, Assistant Secretary of State.

Mrs. Dill Tells Court Romance Began in D. C.

Met After His Speech on Muscle Shoals, She Says in Divorce Case.

By the Associated Press.

Spokane, Wash., July 3.—How love came to a bachelor United States Senator and a suffragist leader in the Nation's Capital was related on the witness stand today in the divorce battle of Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Dill.

Mrs. Dill, the former Rosalie Jones, wealthy suffragist "general," told the story in resisting the former Senator's suit.

"We were natural people," she said. "He had lived the life of a bachelor, I the life of an unmarried woman. We weren't children any more. We put away foolish things. We loved each other, we admired each other.

Then They Were Married.

"And so we were married."

They met, Mrs. Dill testified, after the then Senator from Washington State spoke on the Senate floor on Muscle Shoals.

She testified she sent him a note and a caricature she had drawn of him as she listened.

"I don't remember whether he came to the gallery or to my hotel room," she added, "but anyway we met and talked."

Talked of Marriage.

"We dined together frequently and we talked about marriage, as men and women do." She continued:

"He told me of a cliff in Spokane on which he had always wanted to build a home. He said he loved Spokane and its people. I told him, 'That is all right—your people are my people.'"

In 1932, Dill had testified, his wife became critical of his ideals and his political life, "tried to change me—make me over."

In his divorce complaint he accused her of being a filthy housekeeper, dressing slovenly and saying he "drank like a fish."

she knew she was wanted and intended to give herself up—after she had seen Eddie.

She declined to answer a question as to whether she ever had trouble with "Miss Blake," the name the slain woman was known by in the near North Side pleasure resorts.

"Too Fast a Crowd."

Meantime, relatives of the handsome victim of a bullet police believe was fired in jealousy, summed up her fate as that of "a mild, good-natured girl who got in with too fast a crowd."

Mrs. Cecelia Surridge, 33, said she and their mother who lives with her here had seen Audrey only three times this year.

"We knew Audrey always lived pretty fast," the sister related, "although we could never understand it. She had been carefully brought up and went first to a boarding school in Rensselear, Ind., and then to a convent in Fort Wayne, Ind."

From a diary found in her room after the slaying yesterday the dead woman's own account of her recent life as a night-club butterfly was made public by authorities.

Excerpts from them indicated that her pursuit of pleasure was not always successful:

"March 30—Home all day. —— called and came out. Started on a pint. Went to the Yacht Club and the paddock. A man got smart and hit me. My eye all swelled up, but I hit him back.

Started Drinking Again.

"April 4—Went to the Chez Paree and the Yacht Club. Stayed at the Congress, had breakfast, and so forth. Started drinking again. Had a few drinks at Gibby's and the Palmer House. Home and Mr. G. called at 8:30 and we went to the Empire room.

"April 30—Had some whisky sours at Jacques and Jack bought me a darling bottle of imported perfume. Went to the Chez Paree. Met a gent. Pretty sweet. He fell down about ten times. We went to the Nut House, had a swell time. Home 6 a. m."

There were frequent references to "Eddie," believed by police to be the Nut House partner, but mention of him stopped some months ago.

From hotel employes and others, police said they had identified Mrs. Freed as the brunette who visited Miss Vallette's seventh floor hotel room Thursday forenoon a few minutes before the blonde woman's telephoned call that she had been shot summoned an assistant manager of the house. He found her dead from a single bullet wound in the breast. She had been shot through the heart. Employes said the brunette had fled from the building a few minutes before and drove away in a waiting car.

Capt. Barry said the crime was plainly one of vengeance.

Spain's Railroaders Drop Strike Plans

Madrid, July 3 (AP).—A government threat to nationalize railways caused rail workers to abandon plans tonight for a general strike as scattered political disorders claimed three more lives.

A government spokesman, following a special cabinet session devoted to discussing labor problems, said 13 of the 14 demands made by rail workers had been granted by the operators, but that the fourteenth, asking wage increases, had been refused on the ground it would bankrupt the lines.

The three deaths occurred early today when a group of unidentified men entered the Cafe Roig, a Fascist meeting place, and opened fire with a sub-machine gun. Two men fell mortally wounded, one dropped dead of heart disease and four were wounded.

The assailants escaped.

In Barcelona an attempt was made on the life of Col. Crispulo Moracho, who successfully defended Commander Perez Farras in his trial for participation in the October (1934) revolt.

Assailants hurled two bombs as the colonel left his home. One fell short, the other failed to explode.

U. S. Steel on Strike

shifted the burden of the decision to the A. F. of L. by stating the C. I. O. doubted the executive council would want to split labor's united front in this crisis.

Lewis and his associates hold that all workers in each mass-production industry should be organized into one big union. In that way industrial unions could reach some 30,000,000 men who are now without union organization or are members of company unions, which are held by the C. I. O. to be "company-dictated."

The crafts unionists, who are in undisputed control of the A. F. of L., with a membership of about 3,000,000, which has remained static for years, refuse to permit industrial unionization, holding that the workers in any one industry should be organized by crafts alone. Thus, carpenters in an industry should belong to a carpenters' union, etc.

600,000 in U. M. W.

The United Mine Workers, headed by Lewis, have a membership of 600,000. The steel corporations have 500,000 employes, 225,000 of which are hired by United States Steel. Two new members of the C. I. O., the United Auto Workers and the United Rubber Workers, have about 320,000 employes. The drive to organize them will be continued, even as the push to unionize the steel industry continues.

It appeared possible yesterday that the Lewis-A. F. of L. quarrel might yet be patched up before the executive council meets if William Green, A. F. of L. president, and Lewis can strike a bargain, the Mine Workers' steel unionization fund of $500,000 would be swollen by hundreds of thousands of dollars from the A. F. of L.

President Irvin said in his statement to the workers that the corporation is convinced the open-shop principle of the company has the indorsement of the workers.

He said:

"Much publicity has been released by an organization outside of our industry of its aim to unionize all of our plants. If this be accomplished it means a closed shop, where no one can secure employment unless he is a member of such organization, submits to dictation by the self-chosen leaders and subjects himself to the dues and assessments imposed upon all members.

"* * * No man in our employ has to join any organization in order to work for us. His progress in his work depends upon individual merit and effort, and not upon his influence with some outside organization."

In New Haven, Gorman assailed the "steel barons" in a headlong attack, meanwhile revealing that his organization, the United Textile Workers, has agreed to a plan of cooperation with the C. I. O. to begin a giant drive for unionization of Southern workers.

He said that success of this movement would prevent Northern, and especially New England textile, manufacturers from moving their plants to the South when their employes strike. He said:

"Behind the flat declaration of warfare delivered by the steel barons stands the full support of every other industry * * * This means the textile industry, the metal industry, the garment industry and the rest of industrial New England."

Pleading for a powerful and united Farmer-Labor Party, Gorman then passed into a direct appeal for support, saying:

"To those of us now in the ranks of organized labor the gauntlet thrown down by the steel barons means life and death.

"* * * We will never be successful in protecting our economic and political rights if we are satisfied with the excuses of the manufacturers. We can only succeed if we take matters into our own hands. In order to take matters into our own hands we must have the same kind of weapon our bosses have.

We must have the economic weapon of trade union organization."

R. C. A. Strike Arbitration.

Camden, N. J., July 3 (AP).—E. T. Hamilton, general superintendent of the R. C. A. Manufacturing Co. plant, announced today that company and union representatives will meet Monday in an attempt to negotiate a settlement of the 13-day-old strike.

Hamilton said Elmer T. Cunningham, of Camden, R. C. A. vice president, and David Sarnoff, president, conferred today in New York on the strike situation, but gave no hint of what was considered.

The R. C. A. plant closed at 11 a. m. for the week-end, but picketing continued after that hour.

Ten men were arrested today. Three were charged with tearing down loud-speakers in front of the union strike headquarters. The others were held on disorderly conduct charges.

Ohio Pickets Ejected.

Portsmouth, Ohio, July 3 (AP).—Deputy sheriffs ejected strike pickets from the vicinity of the Scioto County courthouse today as a grand jury began its investigation of violence in connection with a strike of Wheeling Steel Corporation workers.

The jury ordered removal of pickets from the courthouse and streets nearby after Prosecutor Emory Smith asserted the men had taken places in halls and near the building, and were attempting to intimidate witnesses.

Robert Riley, 32, a New Boston steelworker, was held for contempt of court when he refused to obey the grand jury's orders to vacate the courthouse.

Carol and Aids Discuss Return Of Hapsburgs

Rumanian King Believed Near 'Showdown' on Lupescu Battle.

By the Associated Press.

Vienna, July 3.—Two fascinating actors on Europe's stage—a woman and a Hapsburg — concerned Rumania's King Carol tonight.

Advices from Bucharest indicated the opponents of Mme. Magda Lupescu were uniting to make common cause against the woman who bears the brunt of a national anti-Jewish wave.

And Carol, reported pondering the issue of Austrian Hapsburg restoration through the 23-year-old Archduke Otto, was believed in some quarters to be approaching the position of having to take action against Magda's powerful foes or advising his red-haired friend to take a vacation abroad.

The King came back to his capital from vacation today to confer with Premier George Tatarescue and Foreign Minister Nicholas Titulescu. Semi-official reports said they talked about the chances of Otto's restoration in Vienna.

Urged to Remain.

Reports from Bucharest after the conference said Foreign Minister Titulescu wanted to resign because of differences in policy, but other ministers, realizing his importance, urged him to remain.

Informed sources understood Rumania was determined to co-operate with the other members of the Little Entente, Czechoslovakia and Yugoslavia, in bitter opposition to another Hapsburg kingdom.

Friends of Otto in Vienna said the heir, himself, was planning a tour of several months from his Steenockerzeel Castle in Belgium, and probably would go as far as Southern France. He will leave Steenockerzeel tomorrow.

Calls on Women.

The Lupescu issue was brought to a sharp head today, the Rumanian reports said, by a speech at Alba-Julia, in which Juliu Maniu, former premier and leader of the Peasant Party, was reported to have said:

"His Majesty must give Prince Mihai (his son) back to his mother, Queen Helen, who must rear him in the interest of Rumania."

He also called upon Rumanian women, the advices said, to resist the influence of Mme. Lupescu.

"Now her figure shadows the throne of the King," the speech, as reported here, stated. "We won't tolerate it. We are not a nation of Gypsies."

Maniu also was quoted as saying the King had broken his word to the nation by permitting Mme. Lupescu to return to the country following a romantic interlude in France.

Police Drag Lake For Youths' Bodies

Police continued yesterday to drag Deep Creek Lake near the Maryland-West Virginia line for the bodies of two Washington theological students, believed drowned when their canoe overturned Wednesday.

The craft in which Alfred Schrieber, 25, and Paul Rdzok, 24, both students at Holy Cross College of Catholic University here, was found waterlogged in the lake late Thursday. Later that night two pairs of trousers, identified as property of the two youths, were found.

Father McBride, superior of Holy Cross College, who left Thursday for the summer camp which the college maintains and which the two were attending when they disappeared, reported yesterday that their bodies had not been found.

Police and college youths, who are attending the camp, joined in the search.

N.Y.A. Head Denies Communism Claim

New York, July 3 (AP).—Marc A. McCloskey, director of the National Youth Administration for New York City, answering an American Legion county committee's accusations that communism was favorably discussed at a Federal girls' camp in Bear Mountain Park, N. Y., said today "We are not teaching propaganda of any sort there."

The camp, operated under direction of the New York Administration of N. Y. A., cares for unemployed girls, most of them, McCloskey said, former industrial workers.

"We have classes at the camp in current events," McCloskey said, "in which we use the daily newspapers and Government publications as texts—and in economics, for which we use the social security act as text. Communism undoubtedly is mentioned objectively, as an existing form of government, just as is royalism and capitalism. The girls all are over 21, and it is not our right to question them as to their beliefs as a requisite to entrance.

Shell-Shocked Veteran Kills Neighbor With Ax

Veazie, Me., July 3 (U.P.).—Believed upset by explosion of firecrackers, William McKenna, 40-year-old shell-shocked World War veteran, tonight seized an ax and killed his neighbor, Eugene Prouty, 53, police authorities said.

Constable Leonard Lambert, who said he witnessed the alleged slaying with Selectman Bert Kind, reported that the two men had been engaged in a heated argument a short time previously.

McKenna, who recently was discharged from a veteran's hospital at Augusta, was arrested and taken to Bangor County jail, about 6 miles distant.

Upton Sinclair Quits Politics 'Completely'

Pasadena, Calif., July 3 (AP).—A "complete and final" retirement from politics was announced today by Upton Sinclair, who as Democratic nominee for Governor of California in 1934 sponsored a production-for-use program.

His formal "retirement" announcement, he said, was in "answer to numerous requests for a statement as to my attitude to various party platforms and candidates."

Thompson, a youth of Howard County, Md., was convicted of espionage charges, a Stanford University student, Ray Yamanoto (left), was called to the witness stand to identify photos of Thompson's employer, a Japanese naval officer. Accused Admits Murder of Trio With Ax Handle

Lays Ogden, Utah, Slayings to Jealousy Over Wife; Charges Threats.

By the Associated Press.

Los Angeles, July 3.—George Mortensen was arrested here today and confessed, Detective Lieut. P. N. Erickson said, that he killed three persons in Ogden, Utah, last Tuesday with a pick-ax handle.

Mrs. Grace Mortensen, 25, said at Ogden that she fled from her husband because he was drinking heavily and that the slayings resulted when he followed her to the home of her parents, Adam Snyder, 62, and Mrs. Snyder, 52.

In addition to the Snyders, Mrs. Emma Scott Rose, 80, mother of Mrs. Snyder, was clubbed fatally. Mrs. Mortensen is recovering from the effects of the beating she suffered.

Two officers arrested Mortensen in a downtown rooming house. He offered no resistance.

"I don't know what happened in Ogden," Mortensen was quoted as saying. "I must have gone crazy, or something, after we all went to bed."

Mortensen confessed, said Erickson, that jealousy over his wife drove him to distraction. He is her sixth husband, he said.

An excerpt from the prisoner's alleged confession read:

"We were married three months ago at Salt Lake City. Since then I have been supporting her parents and her grandmother—to say nothing of my own three children and my wife's daughter. I gave them $400 since January 1. Then Grace left me two week's ago."

"Finally, I went to Ogden to reason with my wife last Monday," Mortensen's alleged confession continued.

"There her father threatened me with a pick handle, and told me not to bother his daughter. Well, I settled that argument and we went to bed.

"About 3 a. m. Tuesday I awoke to find Mr. Snyder bending over me with the pick handle in his hands. I guess I went crazy because I wrenched it from him and struck him once. Then I ran into the hall and hit someone there—it must have been my grandmother-in-law. After hitting Grace and her mother as they lay in bed, I fled."

Mormons Break Rule, Denounce Communism

Salt Lake City, July 3 (AP).—Leaders of the Latter Day Saints Church, including Herber J. Grant, president, called upon the 750,000 members today to "eschew communism."

In the first move of its kind in the church's history, a communication was directed to the membership assailing communist teachings as "hostile to loyal American citizenship and incompatible with true church membership."

creased were identified in the opinion of a handwriting expert, as made by the same person.

As Assistant United States Attorney Clyde Thomas announced his case at an end, defense counsel moved that the charge against Thompson be dismissed, and Federal Judge Yankwich denied the motion.

Thompson's attorney, J. George O'Hanneson, argued that the Government had failed to prove the accusations set forth in the indictment, namely that "information was used to the injury of the United States and to the advantage of foreign power, to wit, Japan."

Opposite Court View.

O'Hanneson said there was no evidence to indicate that Miyazaki was operating as an agent of Japan, or that the information ever reached Japan.

The court took an opposite view.

"It is my opinion," the judge said, "that there has been more than ample evidence to show that this defendant furnished secret information to a citizen of foreign nation, and that citizen was in the employ of the naval establishment of that country."

A dimunitive and attractive Japanese girl, Janet Ono, appeared a reluctant witness.

A young man who accompanied her jumped to his feet at one point of the testimony and exclaimed: "What's the matter with you, Janet?"

Saw Him in Jail.

"When was the last time you saw Thompson?" the girl was asked.

"When he was in jail—I went with a girl friend," replied Miss Ono.

"Did he ever ask you to run errands for him?"

"Yes."

"What were they"

She then said they were to take a message to Lennie Thompson, friend but no relative of the arrested man, and "a Mr. Hori in the Chamber of Commerce Building."

"He's the Japanese consul in Los Angeles, isn't he?"

"Yes, I think you are right."

Miss Ono said she saw only the secretary to the consul, who said "I don't know Mr. Thompson."

Mother Gets Life Term In Child's Poison Death

Little Rock, Ark., July 3 (AP).—Mrs. Minnie Rose Jenkins, 32, was convicted and sentenced to life imprisonment today for the poison death of her daughter, Alta Fern, 10.

The Pulaski circuit court jury that heard the third trial of the woman accused of causing the deaths of three of her four children, debated four hours.

It was the second time Mrs. Jenkins had been sentenced to life imprisonment. The Supreme Court reversed the first conviction on the grounds her husband had been permitted to testify against her. A second trial last April for the death of her 8-year-old daughter, Sible, resulted in a mistrial when the jury failed to reach a verdict. She also is under a murder indictment for the death of her 6-year-old son, Obelee.

"only to get a chance to tell her story to those who thought she was a gold digger."

In addition to not getting any money, Miss Frink lost some. Costs of the trial, which court clerks assessed against her, will run about $100.

Miss Hayes, still in the same plain blue outfit she wore yesterday, was jubilant at her triumph, witnessed by a "standing room only" audience.

Wanted to Clear Husband.

"I wanted it to be clear before the public which supported me," she asserted, smiling. "I have a child growing up (the "act of God" baby which caused her show to close when she retired to prepare for its birth) and I would not want the feeling that my husband was in any way culpable in such a state of affairs. I think that has been proven to the satisfaction of everyone concerned."

MacArthur was kept busy shaking hands of people who knew him as a Chicago newspaperman. The trial was fun, except for those love letters he wrote 16 years ago, he said, adding: "There ought to be a law against introducing love letters more than 15 years old in open court."

None of the letters was accepted as evidence, and therefore not privileged for publication, but the playwright saw himself as "the goat" of the trial and said he was glad "it was me and not Miss Hayes."

The trial, MacArthur admitted, had its awkward moments.

There was, for example, the discussion of whether he was "a genius" or just "nutty."

Not Sure of "Genius."

MacArthur had warned his first wife before he married her in 1920, she testified yesterday, that he "was a genius."

"You think he is a genius, don't you?" the Hayes, attorney, Jay Frederick Reeve, asked today. She replied:

"It's hard to say. He's nutty as a genius. But there's a very fine line there. It would take a psychoanalyst to tell for sure."

There was, for another example, the discussion of "the wonderful way" MacArthur made love in his letters. Miss Frink admitted the letters were "very sweet."

Q. "Do you love Mr. MacArthur now?"

A. "I love the memory of him as he was then."

Q. "But do you love him now?"

A. "I don't think I'd even like him as he was on the witness stand."

Q. "When did you cease loving him?"

A. "When he took the stand yesterday."

Head Revealed In Box Believed Ex-Fireman's

Sister of Missing Cincinnatian Among 3 Questioned in Slaying.

By the Associated Press.

Indianapolis, July 3.—Capt. Matt Leach, of the Indiana State Police, today expressed the belief that a cottage on the White Water River near New Trenton, Ind., was the scene of the slaying of a man whose head and hands were found imbedded in a box of cement in a lake near Carrollton, Ky.

He said he was convinced the victim was Capt. Harry A. Miller, wealthly retired Cincinnati fireman.

Miller's sister, Flora Miller, 66, a former opera singer; her cousin, Mrs. Laura Huss, and Heber L. Hicks, employed by Miss Miller as a chauffeur, were questioned here today concerning the disappearance of the former fireman, who has been missing since June 12. No charges have been placed against the three.

Liquor Hijacking Involved.

At Cincinnati police held a man registered as Edward Huder, 35, a former garage employe, who was quoted by officers as saying he had accompanied Hicks to Louisville, Ky., the day following Miller's disappearance.

State Police Detective John Barton, who brought Miss Miller, Mrs. Huss and Hicks to this city, said investigation had disclosed correspondence relating to the disposition of 1,000 cases of hijacked whisky at $10 a case. The names of Hicks and Miller were mentioned in the correspondence, Barton said. He declined to say who had written the letters.

Records of the State crime bureau disclosed that Hicks in 1917 was sentenced at Cynthiana, Ky., to serve a life term for the slaying of a girl, but was pardoned in 1929.

Head, Hands Identified.

Dispatches from Cincinnati said Miss Miller had been identified in 1929 by social welfare workers as a former opera singer who had traveled through the United States, Canada and Europe using the name of Florence D'Ephia.

The head and hands have been identified as those of the missing man by three friends and Capt. Leach said a headless and handless body found in a culvert near Eminence, Ky., trussed up with a clothesline is undoubtedly that of Miller. Three bullet wound were found in the skull and two bullet wounds in the torso.

The Federal postal inspectors declared confiscation of the tickets was the largest seizure of its kind ever made in the country.

Indiscretions Denied to Court By Mrs. Edgar

Calls Her Former Husband Wife - Beater, Gambler; Case Resumes Monday.

By the Associated Press.

Miami, Fla., July 3.—Black-haired Kathryn Crawford Edgar, calling her divorced husband a wife-beater and gambler, denied in court today his charge that she was indiscreet with young Lewis E. Mallory 3d, Pennsylvania oil heir.

Then after two hours of cross-examination in the trial of Edgar's $300,000 heart balm suit against Mallory, Mrs. Edgar pleaded for a halt.

"Please, Mr. Glickstein," she appealed to her attorney, S. Arthur Glickstein, of New York, who sat beside her and supplied her with glasses of water. "I can't stand this much longer—I can't stand it."

It was only five minutes to the regular hour of adjournment, so Circuit Judge Worth W. Trammell recessed court until Monday.

Mrs. Edgar, who said she was born in Wellsboro, Pa., and that her maiden name was Kathryn Crawford Moran, appeared as a court's witness.

Under Glickstein's questioning she accounted in detail for all her nights in Miami Beach last March and denied ever visiting Mallory's room in the Deauville Hotel or committing any indiscretions with him.

Then John M. Murrell, of Mallory's counsel, began questioning her. She said Edgar was "in the sugar business and gambling business." Asked what connection he had in the latter business, she said: "He finances it."

"In other words," asked Murrell, "he's what is known as a banker?"

"Yes."

She identified pictures made of her in a hospital where she was confined for three weeks in February, 1935, and said Edgar had beaten her.

Long-Sought Indian Village Held Found

Bismarck, N. Dak., July 3 (AP).—Discovery of the long-sought Mandan Indian village site visited by Sieur de la Verendrye, first white explorer known to have entered the Missouri Valley nearly 200 years ago, was claimed today.

Walter D. Powell, Fargo, declared he had "positively" located it north of Menoken, 15 miles east of Bismarck.

After investigating Powell's findings, George Will, director and vice president of the North Dakota Historical Society, agreed there was "virtually no doubt" but that the site was the place visited by Verendrye in December, 1738.

"I believe it is the location we have been seeking for 30 years," he said.

Russell Reid, superintendent of the State historical society, stated it was never "quite satisfied" with the spot near Sanish which has been credited as the stopping point of the French explorer.

Although a national monument to Verendrye has been erected on Crow High Butte, south of Sanish, attempts will be made by the society to have the new site designated a State park, Will said.

N. C. Voting Today In Run-off Primary

Charlotte, N. C., July 3 (AP).—North Carolina Democrats will choose tomorrow between the veteran Clyde Hoey, administration adherent, and young Dr. Ralph McDonald, militant sales tax repealist, for their next Governor.

The Democratic nomination is equivalent to election.

Hoey led McDonlad, 33-year-old former college professor, by 4,000 votes in the four-cornered first primary which saw a record vote of more than 500,000.

Election officials estimated the second primary, falling on July 4, would bring out less than 400,000 votes, many of them absentee ballots.

Appelgate Loses Plea; Dies at Sing Sing July 16

Mineola, N. Y., July 3 (AP).—A new trial was denied Everett Appelgate, sentenced to die July 16 with Mrs. Frances Creighton for the poison-murder of Appelgate's wife, by County Judge Cortland Johnson today. Appelgate's lawyer said they could hope now only for executive clemency to delay the execution.

Attorneys for Mrs. Creighton will go into court next week to ask for a new trial for her. At Sing Sing prison Mrs. Creighton is bedridden, paralyzed by fear of the electric chair, prison officials said.

license and other fliers' documents, all badly charred; part of a telegram inviting Mrs. Nason to the air races at Denver and several pictures, apparently of the plane and its woman pilot.

The pilot's log also was found, badly burned, but with recognizable entries which indicated several flights with passengers out of Rochester.

The license indicated the pilot formerly lived in Hollywood and had moved to Rochester.

Left on Wednesday.

Rochester, N. Y., July 3 (AP).—Ruth Barron Nason, reported killed in an air crash at Omaha, Nebr., today, left here for Denver on Wednesday.

Her abrupt flying departure, to participate in air races to be staked in conjunction with the national balloon race at Denver, followed a period of several months during which she showed no apparent interest in flying and had not been near her plane at the municipal airport.

Always a daring, thrill-seeking flier, Mrs. Nason took her plane to the Cleveland air races last year, but was grounded for stunting.

She began her flying career at her home here and although only 25, was already a veteran of the skyways.

Stunt Flier at 18.

Her flying instructor was Lieut. Otto Enderton, World War pilot. At 18 she already was doing commercial and stunt flying in Hollywood. In 1930 she won applause of fliers by landing a racing plane safely in the Arizona desert during the women's air derby. She was in close third place when forced out of the race.

In 1931 she left her Hollywood work and with Capt. Thomas Ash went to Tokyo, determined to be the first woman to fly the Pacific. Plans were laid, but the pretty, 20-year-old miss met and married William Franklin Nason, then American consul in Kobe, and the flight was abandoned.

Much of her reputation was built upon her dexterous management of many forced landings. Last summer she thrilled crowds with stunting here at the Centennial Air Show.

A year ago she purchased from Jack Wright, of Utica, the special racing monocoupe plane that carried her to her death. Wright had flown the plane in the London-Australia Air Derby. He failed to place among the winners, but completed the long flight.

Girl Ace Lands Flaming Plane, Escapes Injury

Jacqueline Cochran, Flying Hughes' Craft, Crashes at 100 M. P. H.

By the Associated Press.

Indianapolis, July 3.—Miss Jacqueline Cochran, of Los Angeles, landed an airplane in flames at a 100-mile-an-hour speed at the Municipal Airport here today and jumped from the ship uninjured.

Miss Cochran was piloting the plane in which Howard Hughes, motion picture producer, established several speed records.

She was en route from Kansas City to Columbus, Ohio. As she neared this city she said a loose connection in the oil line started the fire.

Miss Cochran streaked for the airport, the ship in flames.

The blaze was extinguished quickly by a fire truck at the airport, with little damage to the plane.

As the ship landed it went into a ground loop. The left landing gear was broken and one wing damaged.

Miss Cochran said she planned to continue on to New York by a commercial air line.

She has competed in several women's derbies and air races and is rated one of the leading women pilots of the country.

Ignatius Dinehart, manager of the airport, who spotted the flaming plane from his window and had the fire truck waiting when she came in, said she made a beautiful landing.

"She had to be good to set that plane down, the speed she was making," he said. "Our little old $25 fire truck certainly paid dividends. It saved a $100,000 ship."

Support From The Legion.

An item of very great local importance was the announcement of an American Legion spokesman in Portland, Oreg., that the support of teacher's oath bills is no longer a national policy of the organization. The National Education Association, there in convention, was naturally overjoyed to hear that the resolution favoring such measures, passed by the Legion in 1934, is now no longer in effect.

Frank Miles, editor of the Iowa Legionnaire, declared he had the authorization of the national commander to quote him as believing that the Legion would make a mistake if it advocated passage of such bills. Americanism, he continued (and Dixon Hill should take note), > does not consist of throwing children into jail because they might fail to salute the flag. And neither does Americanism consist of enforcing compulsory oaths of loyalty upon any class of citizens. . . . Commander Murphy rightly believes that some of the sources agitating such legislation are as menacing to American democracy as the elements they profess to be attacking.

These will be welcome words for educators generally and particularly those of Washington who are fighting the "ited rider." With this swing of the well-organized Legion to the side of academic freedom there should be little doubt as to the rider's quick repeal at the next session of Congress.

Although the NEA omitted reference to the Reserve Officers Training Corps, it adopted the customary resolution opposing compulsory military training in public schools or universities. The educators are entirely justified, in insisting that the school's primary function is the intellectual development of those entrusted to it.

Shenandoah National Park.

There can be no disagreement with President Roosevelt's enthusiasm for the national parks system. And his reference to the work of the CCC, in his brief speech dedicating the Shenandoah National Park yesterday will meet an equally general response. It was a happy phrase which described the labors of the boys in the camps around Stony Man as "the joint husbandry of our human resources and our natural resources."

The 176,000 acres of the Shenandoah National Park, so rich in natural beauty, so easily accessible to Washington, will always seem the particular heritage of those who live in this vicinity. But they also provide a national shrine unusually rich in historic associaton.

The road over which the President traveled yesterday was first blazed by Gov Spotswood and his Knights of the Golden Horseshoe. Even more aromatic, however, are the more homely Americanisms of the vicinity. Beneath those mountains is spread a landscape known to Washington and Jefferson, to Madison and Monroe. There lived the forebears of Lincoln. From there went Houston to carve Tennessee and later Texas from the wilderness. There McCormick built his first reaper. There Sheridan and Early and Jackson galloped to immortality. There Woodrow Wilson was born.

The land of the Shenandoah, Indian for "daughter of the stars," has seen the flowering of much that is finest in the American tradition. It is well that it should be set aside as a permanent national shrine.

Apostle Of Laissez Faire.

There is something very pathetic in the death, by suicide, of Alexander Berkman.

Time was when this vehement anarchist shared, with Emma Goldman, the top-line of radical publicity in America. Tirelessly he preached the doctrine that human perfectibility is hampered by governmental controls. Frequently he predicted that the dream of an unsupervised Utopia would first come true in Russia.

Then revolution came to the Empire of the Czars; came with all the savagery that the anarchists had predicted. Yet, when Berkman was deported to the vineyard, he found its grapes bitter. Here was not his kind of revolution. Here was not less government, but more. He would have none of it; it would have none of him. "It is a return to capitalism," said the disillusioned Berkman.

Whatever the definition, Soviet Russia went on without him and his comrades and the rest of the world also went on to exalt the power of the state which Berkman hated. The anarchists were not merely failures: they were forgotten failures. So now Berkman, exiled from America and exiled from Russia, puts an end to his life in France.

Only his death brings to the new generation a knowledge that he ever lived. Perhaps it may also serve to recall that, in this changing world, we once considered revolutionary opposition to centralized government the extreme of radical doctrine.

Essential Employment Data.

Although more than six years of depression has focused public attention upon the gravity of unemployment, the country does not yet know how many people are seeking work and unable to find it. We are still dependent upon necessarily inaccurate estimates in the handling of a problem where precise and accurate information is essential.

Contrary to a widely held lay opinion, however, there would be little or no advantage in a formal count of noses among the unemployed. A record of this sort would have little more than historical value by the time it was ready for publication, and would at best be only a bare numerical record. Nevertheless, it is essential to have reliable current information as to the numbers, location and occupational qualifications of the unemployed, both for the prompt filling of such jobs as are available and for the basis of any scientific relief system.

The United States Employment Service is steadily building up a placement system which will eventually supply essential data of this sort and make it possible to determine the scope and incidence of unemployment. Although not effectively inaugurated until 1933, and throughout confined by meager appropriations, the national public employment exchange system has been making rapid strides of late. In May, for instance, its placements with private employers reached the highest level in almost two years, while the number of jobs filled on non-relief public works increased to the highest point since the service was established. On the other hand, placements on WPA and other relief projects declined.

This Federal employment service, assisted by affiliated and co-operating State employment agencies, is the logical medium through which to obtain current information concerning the unemployed. Its records provide a constant reflection of changing conditions and have a highly practical value which will increase as registration with public employment exchanges becomes more extensive. Without the aid of the employment exchanges, unemployment insurance would be far more difficult to establish. And by linking the payment of benefits with the placing agency, unemployment registration will tend to become automatic, and, therefore, statistically valuable.

Meantime the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor, through its long-established system for reporting changes in numbers employed in manufacturing industries, is in a position to throw some light on the progress that has been made toward absorbing the unemployed. Although the bureau estimates that in May about 1,570,000 fewer persons were employed in manufacturing industries than in 1929, it concludes that, exclusive of agriculture and emergency work, about 5,370,000 more persons were at work than in March, 1933.

Furthermore, some manufacturing industries were in May employing more persons than in 1929, despite the general recession. Such data, showing changes in employment by industries, emphasize the need of an inquiry into the shifting demand for labor to determine whether it is due to new consumer demands, technological improvements or other causes. In making policy-forming inquiries of this nature the aid of the employment service will, of course, be invaluable.

Eventually a comprehensive, reliable system of unemployment statistics will be built up from the records of the Federal Employment Service and affiliated agencies. Until those services have become firmly established, however, we shall continue to be severely handicapped by ignorance of the basic facts in treating unemployment and related relief problems.

The Hindenburg's New Record.

The tumult and the shouting that greeted the Hindenburg after its first crossing of the North Atlantic in May were conspicuous by their absence when the giant dirigible arrived at Lakehurst last Thursday. The item was buried in the inside pages of the newspapers. So quickly does the unusual become the commonplace in our times.

Yet this latest crossing of the German airship was in many respects far more notable than was the maiden voyage. The course was via Greenland and Labrador—the great circle route—and then down the St. Lawrence and Hudson River valleys to the Naval Air Station at Lakehurst. Visibility was poor for a good part of the way and several times the airship picked up ice, adding considerably to the weight. Yet the passage was made in 51 hours 17 minutes, a new record, and one which compares very favorably with the best time made by airplanes over similar distances.

The achievements of the Hindenburg and its sister-ship, the Graf Zeppelin, make abundantly clear that the dirigible is an entirely feasible type of air transportation for commercial if not military purposes. It emphasizes the conclusions of the Durand board, representing the views of a distinguished group of engineers appointed by the Secretary of the Navy, that a new attempt should be made to build and operate lighter-than-air ships in this country, despite our unfortunate experience with the Shenandoah, the Akron and the Macon.

Britain And Egypt.

The "perpetual alliance" which, it is reported from London, Great Britain and Egypt are about to conclude, should greatly ease existing tensions in the Eastern Mediterranean. With a friendly ally rather than a turbulent and hostile vassal astride the Suez Canal, the British will be able to breathe easier regarding the future of that vital artery. At the same time the new deal in Anglo-Egyptian relations will vouchsafe Egypt real rather than merely nominal sovereignty.

The pact is to a striking degree a posthumous vindication of the wise and conciliatory statesmanship of the late Arthur Henderson. As foreign secretary of the second Labor government (1929-1931), Henderson sought to break the impasse in Anglo-Egyptian affairs that has existed since the British protectorate was established in 1922. He was not prepared, any more than were any of his predecessors, to order an evacuation of the Sudan in favor of Egypt or abandon Britain's determination to defend the Suez Canal. But he believed that British interests in Egypt were compatible with Egypt's claim to independence. The treaty which he drew up would have eliminated all outward vestiges of Britain's domination in Egypt, the defense of the Suez Canal becoming a joint undertaking of both nations.

But the 1930 treaty never came into force. The Egyptian Nationalists were adamant on the subject of Egypt's right to the Sudan and insistent that Great Britain clear out of that region bag and baggage. On the other hand a large element within the Conservative party, so soon to return to power, regarded the draft treaty as a betrayal of Britain's imperial interests.

Apparently there has been a change of heart on both sides. The British now realize that Egypt's aspirations to freedom cannot permanently be suppressed; that with the situation in the Mediterranean being what it is, a disturbed and disgruntled Egypt constitutes a perpetual danger to Great Britain. The Baldwin government, therefore, despite the objections of the diehards, is now prepared to go back to the policy urged by Henderson.

At the same time the Egyptian Nationalists appear to be in a somewhat chastened mood with regard to the Sudan. For 25 years Italy has been Egypt's western neighbor. Now, with Ethiopia part of the Italian empire, it is also a neighbor on the south and is in control of the headwaters of the Blue Nile, vital to Egypt. It is now clear to many Egyptians that were Great Britain to evacuate the Sudan it probably would not be long before Italy would step in. Thus, it is reported, they are now prepared to reduce their demands regarding the Sudan to a minimum, asking only that Great Britain admit Egypt's claim to a partnership of equals.

Sunburns.

Time was when sunburn was just a "superficial inflammation of the skin" caused by Sol's rays. First it was red, then it was sore, and finally it peeled off like birch bark. Sunburn time coincided with vacation days and was looked on as a seasonal evil to be endured like hay fever or chilblains. Then came the dawn—and to be or not to be sunburned is now the burning issue.

The new order of sunburns need not have a thing to do with the sun. Five minutes a day, under a specially devised lamp in milady's bedroom, accomplishes as much pigmentation of the epidermis as an hour in the ol' swimming hole. In this cozy manner the degree of tan may be regulated so that one may bronze like a lifeguard or simply take on a faint glow. In the good old days, summertime meant freckles for everybody, from little Willie to Aunt Susie. But these synthetic sunburns are selected with all the care which goes into choosing a hat. Rain may continue to fall on the just and the unjust. But the sun now strikes only where it is most becoming.

There seems to be only one factor which remains the same in the case of the old and the new-fangled sunburn. And that is the friends who persist in slapping you on a sunburned back.

No Praetorian Guards.

Calvin B. Hoover in the Virginia Quarterly Review.

> Why is it not possible for capitalists carefully to select and groom a dictator who will defend and maintain laissez-faire capitalism while suppressing parliamentary democratic government? The experience of both Italy and Germany indicates the almost insuperable obstacles to the success of such a scheme . . .
> For such an effort to be really successful there must be a very large degree of mass support. Such support cannot be obtained for a program which appeals directly only to conservatives, as can be seen in the United States from the experience of the Liberty League. Nor does it seem possible for a mere mercenary demagogue, mouthing a radicalism which he intends to betray, to secure a wide and permanent enough following to support a dictatorship safe for laissez-faire capitalism . . .
> The maintenance of a capitalistic system based on private property and on direction by individual capitalists depends in turn upon the continued maintenance of parliamentary government. Any group of capitalists who attempt to set up a politically totalitarian state as a sort of Praetorian guard for capitalism would find that they had in effect set their feet on the surprisingly short road which leads to economic totalitarianism.

The Task Of The Opposition.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your fairness as the editor of an independent newspaper will, no doubt, permit me to comment on your editorial of June 29, relating to President Roosevelt's acceptance speech at Philadelphia.

In this treatise you seem to have some misgivings over Mr. Roosevelt's "ringing promise to wage war on the concentration of power in the hands of those whom he called 'economic royalists.'" In sizing up the situation in the clear light of facts, have we not become more and more dependent upon each other as the Nation has progressed?

Back on my farm in Virginia is mute evidence of the rugged individualism of my ancestors. The old spinning wheels, cloth looms, the flax pond where this fiber was carried through the process of soaking, the brick molds where building material was formed, serve to demonstrate the independence of these people as far as the necessities of life were concerned.

Today, however, conditions have changed. People are being brought into the maelstrom of economic interdependence whether they like it or not. This is the condition civilization has brought upon us. Take, for example, the crime situation. The Federal Department of Justice has been a necessary institution in order to cope with criminals in the new order of a nationalized society. Is it not then logical that our economic problems have become national in scope and must be handled in a similar fashion?

Further on it is noted that the Roosevelt Administration is accused of dabbling in "housing, banking reorganization, agricultural rehabilitation" and so on . . . "with very modest success." Can it really be claimed that the Federal Housing Administration has not been a huge success when it was virtually impossible to have one's home refinanced just prior to the inception of this agency?

Could one justly say that our banking system has not been bettered a hundred fold? Finally, can it be claimed that the farming situation is not a hundred per cent better than in March 1933?

After all, Mr. Editor, the opposition will have to offer something more constructive than the present Administration, despite its shortcomings, in order to hope to win in November. So far they have failed to do this.

Consistency.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Oh, consistency: what a jewel! A majority rule at the convention, and a two-thirds rule at the Supreme Court. Are we losing our minds? Are we blind? Let's close up shop and go home before we all become infected. FRISBY GILBERT.

Tolerance In Athletics.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Our young competing athletes are usually fair fighters—broad and tolerant, socially. Organizers in athletic competition have begun to show liberality even in Texas where mixed meets were held this year with Metcalfe the star.

If our local promoters could only recognize the growing spirit of democracy in sport among those who compete and those who look on, Washington would rate higher in athletic annals among the cities of the country. When colored boys begin to get the training in the weights, hurdles, throws and jumps they will add much to America's might in international events.

Let's get more Christian and have a new deal in athletic competition right here at home.

Five-Cent Fares.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Mr. Clayton's argument for limited trial at five cents per ride on the transit system is a sound one. But the strongest argument yet advanced for a five-cent fare comes from no less a source than the transit company itself, through its representative, Vice President Merrill, in his estimate of lower cost per ride due to the pass system. A straight five-cent fare would cut out the abuse of the pass.

The sizable wage boost undoubtedly socked the company in the exchequer, which putting of "human rights before property rights" may or may not have spelled the "greatest good for the greatest number." P. BINNS.

Whose Dilemma?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: You really deserve a gold medal for your editorial of June 29, concerning the "Landon Dilemma." At last some one has found some genuine campaign material. All good, righteous Democrats should be up in arms and Republicans should resort to sack-cloth and ashes until Landon repents and puts aside his detective stories for better entertainment.

I suggest that the spotless Democrats form a committee to select his literature for him. They could possibly get some suggestions from you yourself, although your knowledge of detective stories is amazing.

It's a dilemma, all right, but is it Landon's? P. A. NELSON.

The Arab Side.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The Jewish-Arab crisis has the front page again. What is now threatened—Transjordania joining its forces with the Arabs of Palestine—has long been up the sleeve of the Palestinian Arabs. Here is the situation from the Arab standpoint:

The Jewish nation or people had their capital in Palestine destroyed by Titus, the Roman general, in 70 A. D. The Jews from that time on scattered to the very ends of the earth. Arabs have occupied Palestine as conquerors of it with as much right, they say, as the Jews occupied it by conquering it under Joshua. The Arabs hold the Cave of Macphelah where Abraham, Isaac and Jacob are buried, and the sacred Rock on the Temple Site over which a Mosque has been built. These two sites constitute the ones most reverenced by both Jews and Arabs.

During Turkish rule over Palestine, the Arabs were kept in desperate poverty, though the Turks were Moslem in faith. The Arabs declare they can show evidence for their contention that when they agreed to assist the British in driving the Turks from Palestine, the British let the Arabs' leaders know that Palestine should be theirs thereafter. But a secret bargain, so the Arabs contend, was later made with Jewish leaders, in consideration of a powerful agency which the Jews would put in British hands, that if Allenby conquered the country and drove out the Turks, Palestine should be given as a homeland for the Jews. The Balfour declaration is much what the Monroe Doctrine was and is—a mere gesture or desire, rather, than a command.

The mandate over Palestine which the League accorded to the British, gave no more force to the Balfour declaration than its wording carried. Hence, as Jews began to pour into Palestine, under supposition that this country was once more to be theirs, Arab opposition began. With German Jews coming in numbers of late, that opposition has arisen to a crisis. The Arabs desire an All-Arab State, made up of the Arabian peninsula, which includes Syria, Transjordania and, of course, Palestine. The Arabs already have what is practical control of all this territory but Palestine. They contend that this section of their loved peninsula belongs to them on basis of conquest, of long continued dwelling there and on international justice.

I give this brief as the Arab side of the controversy. I do so without asserting it is right, but because our daily press has not, as far as I can see, given the Arab view of the situation. J. O. KNOTT.

Estimate Of The G. O. P.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The Republican Party faithfully and obediently nominated a candidate who will exalt balanced budgets above human welfare and render implicit obedience to his plutocrat-masters.

The Republican Party faithfully promises to encourage and promote Tory patriotism, professional patriotism, fetish worship and reactionary sary legislation.

The Republican Party faithfully and obediently dedicates its financial resources, political powers, prestige, intellectual proficiency, thought, energy and desire to the end that government of plutocracy, by plutocracy and for plutocracy shall not perish from the earth.

A Salute.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The 1936 issue is clear cut; it is between the New Despotism represented by the inflexible regimentation of our citizens on the one hand, and on the other by American liberty and freedom of action as we have known them for nearly two centuries.

A salute to the man who stands four square for American ideals, American traditions and American principles! A rousing victory in November for Gov. Alfred M. Landon of Kansas!

Indebtedness And The Future

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In view of the recent statement of the Secretary of the Treasury on the national debt, and of the declared policy of the party in power to continue their program of unrestrained spending, if continued in power, there seems to be no escape from the conclusion that it is the intention of the present generation of the American people to pass on to the next generation the indebtedness amassed by this one.

In this connection, it may be of interest to recall the attitude of our third President, Mr. Jefferson (who, by the way called himself a Republican), on this point:

"It is a wise rule, and should be fundamental in a Government disposed to cherish its credit . . . never to borrow a dollar without laying a tax in the same instant for paying the interest annually, and the principal within a given term . . . On such a pledge as this, sacredly observed, a Government may always command on a reasonable interest all the lendable money of their citizens, while the necessity of an equivalent tax is a salutary warning to them and their constituents against oppressions, bankruptcy and its inevitable consequence revolution."

The term of redemption was, he claimed, determined by the law of nature:

"The earth belongs to the living and not to the dead. We may consider each generation as a distinct nation, with the right by the will of the majority to bind themselves, but none to bind the succeeding generations more than the inhabitants of another country.

"The soil is the gift of God to the living as much as it has been to the deceased generation, and the laws of nature impose no obligation on them to pay this debt."

A patriotic people will pinch themselves to discharge a debt contracted by their fathers, provided that it was necessary to preserve their national rights or integrity; but if they are persuaded that such a debt was not contracted to confer any permanent benefit, and that there is no quid pro quo inherited with it, they cannot be bound by a contract in which they have had no voice. Should at the same time their economic situation be in a state of depression, which is not inconceivable, the urge to assert the right of repudiation is not to be regarded as an impossibility.

The Post Impressionist

An Erasmus Riddle.

Post Office, Saturday.

ON Sunday, July 12, there is going to be a world-wide—almost—commemoration of that man whom Prof. Stephen Duggan calls "the greatest humanist of the Renaissance." Dr. Duggan says:

"We shall celebrate the 400th anniversary of the death of Erasmus."

Not that Dr. Duggan uses the verb in its vulgar sense. He utters it through the News Bulletin of the Institute of International Education. So he doesn't imply any rejoicing over the fact that the cohtroversial Hollander is still dead. Dr. Duggan means a Websterian celebration—a solemn observance.

Here in Washington sermons will be preached on Erasmus. There will be a special evensong service at the Cathedral, Erasmus exhibits at the Congressional and Folger libraries. Thirty minutes after noon an Erasmus radio program will start, some of its voices coming from Holland, the Washington speakers including Lester K. Born (whose version of Erasmus' "Education of a Christian Prince" is now on the press), The Netherlands' Minister (or his representative) and the Minister of Switzerland.

For our part, we shall listen attentively:

Erasmus had a body as frail, a mind almost as strong, as St. Basil's: there is more than coincidence in the service of Erasmus as adviser of the Froben edition of that illustrious Fourth Century Cappadocian—the first Greek author to be published (in Greek) in Germany. Nevertheless, the hesitant Augustinian canon coddled his physique as the Saint scorned to cuddle his. The Church Father fasted with fatal rigor; Erasmus, though companion to Colet and More, shunned fish because he could not bear even the smell of it, gave up beer and Rhenish wine—for Burgundy!

This blond man, short, yet graceful, with pale blue eyes, yellow locks (recall Holbein's portraits of him) and a smile so much like Voltaire's that you have to believe Voltaire copied it—kings wrote to him, as kings wrote to St. Basil, "princes, prelates, men of learning." St. Basil was unmoved; Erasmus was not unflattered—but what letter both of them wrote in reply! Both though so differently and so severated by time, had the ear of the world—and the world by the ears.

Of course, we shall listen attentively!

We haven't entirely forgotten youthful reading of Desiderius. We know he had a supreme wit. We honor him as one of the men who opened benighted western Europe to Byzantine learning and culture and so to exegetical science.

But we shall listen also in the hope that the speakers will explain some of the Erasmus mysteries—and tell why the death of Erasmus should be commemorated on July 12 (or, for that matter, July 11), 1936.

Where was he born? Contemporaries said Gouda. He suggested Rotterdam and added "Roterodamus" to his name.

When was he born? His own Tenth Epistle admits his uncertainty.

For our insatiable curiosity it's not enough that his romantic allusions to his parents gave Charles Reade inspiration for "The Cloister and the Hearth."

And, finally, what was the religion of this soul so generally accounted a dominant figure in the religion of western Europe during the turmoil of the Reformation?

For a time he was a professor of divinity at Cambridge. It is decidedly as a layman that he pictures the riotous Lyonese tavern in the Diversorium of his "Colloquies."

He discarded his canonical costume—yet only after asking, and receiving, papal permission.

It is commonly declared that "he laid the egg which Luther hatched." One of Erasmus' declarations was that, though his stomach was Lutheran, his heart was Catholic.

Luther was seldom at pains to conceal his contempt for Erasmus. Erasmus, after intimating that he never read Luther, attacked what he called Luther's determinism.

The Pope was Erasmus' friend. Yet so was Melanchthon.

Says Nisard:

"He understood much—and affirmed little."

Said Erasmus:

"I have no inclination to die for the truth."

Die, however, he at last did—though for no religious cause, and abed. It's merely the date that, in connection with this forthcoming celebration, bothers the Post-Impressionist.

Erasmus died on July 11, 1536. The celebration is to be held on July 12, 1936, because July 12, 1936, happens to be a Sunday. But supposing, even, that the celebration occurred on July 11, 1936, wouldn't the celebrants be at least 13 days ahead of the true 400th anniversary?

Erasmus died on a July 11 of the Old Style Calendar.

It was another controversial author, Mrs. Tonna—"Charlotte Elizabeth"—who died on a July 11 of the New Style.

Fair Enough

The Olympics.

Your correspondent has blown hot and cold on the question whether the American Olympic Team should be sent to Berlin this summer to participate in a set of games which were originally intended to be a sporting rodeo pure and simple. There is something to be said against the appearance of the Americans, under the American colors, in a program which is being misused to ballyhoo not merely a foreign government but a foreign political system which is a gory outrage against everything included in the term "Americanism."

Let us not go into a long discussion of "Americanism." Everybody knows it means freedom of speech, freedom of the press, education, the ballot and worship. These are American ideals, and they are all being kicked to death by the Black Guards and the Brown Shirts of Adolf Hitler.

Although the American Government has never made a State enterprise of the Olympic Games, it is no new thing to find the games subsidized and managed as a state affair in other lands. In most countries the amateur athletic organizations are unable to handle the show without government assistance, financial and executive both. This, however, is the first time that a government has used the games to ballyhoo its political leaders and promote a system which is, to say the least, in controversy. If the Nazis had the sportsmanship and the decency to efface themselves and their system from the games the question would be quite simple.

* * * *

But they haven't and they won't. In Garmisch during the winter they brought in their Black Guards, Brown Shirts, Militarized Police and Militarized Work Troops by thousands, and the town was simply an army concentration, lacking not even artillery or tanks. On three days out of eight they brought in Adolf Hitler, and when Hitler came to town they lined the streets for miles with soldiers and converted the Olympic Games into military party demonstrations. On other days they paid similar, though naturally inferior, military honors to lesser politicians. They spied on their guests and resorted to incredibly stupid attempts to bulldoze or seduce foreign correspondents into Nazi propaganda.

They were so dumb, however, that the upshot of it all was that they made chumps of themselves before the civilized races. Nobody was deceived, and if you are interested in reading a considered and dispassionate piece on the subject by a good writer who was present throughout the Garmisch games you can find it under the name of Paul Gallico in the current College Humor. They are such thick, bungling dopes, those Nazi party politicians, that they are always showing themselves up in stratagems which they intend to be subtle. They will do it again this summer.

Now the New York Olympic Committee is advertising for contributions with which to pay the way of the American team to Berlin for the summer games. They have a deficit of $140,000. That means that part of the team will go, anyway, but that if the $140,000 isn't raised the rest of the players will not be able to make the trip and won't have their chance to take their bows and strut their stuff.

* * * *

This means a lot to a young athlete. They aren't much interested in politics at the Olympic age, and those who have qualified undoubtedly will feel pretty sore about it all if they are dropped from the squad for lack of money. Every kid who has been lopped off the football squad and left home when the team went away for the big game knows how sad that disappointment is. Moreover, in this case the stay-at-homes would be likely to think that they had been the victims of injustice and political influences. The youngster who is dropped from the football squad on the eve of the big game can take it with sporting resignation, however it may hurt. He knows he didn't quite make the grade.

So why not let them all go? They are good kids, good athletes, and deserve their reward. Some of them may never rise so high again in all their lives. And if their Americanism is equal to their proficiency in sport they will be disgusted, not sold, by the Nazi system and will come home detesting everything Nazi from Hitler himself to the lowest panhandling Brown Shirt shaking a tin cup in their faces in the beer saloons at night.

Starhemberg Leaves For Parley in Italy

Vienna, July 3 (AP).—A Heimwehr official said tonight Prince Ernst Rudiger von Starhemberg, leader of the Heimwehr, had departed for Italy for the third time within two months for political discussions with officials there.

Heimwehr sources said internal and external difficulties of Chancellor Kurt Schuschnigg have increased recently because the Little Entente nations of Rumania, Yugoslavia and Czechoslovakia were convinced he encouraged the drive for the restoration of the Hapsburgs.

(The Little Entente has warned Austria that in the event of the restoration of Archduke Otto it would take "such action" as it deemed necessary.)

Hungarians Demand Active Army Leader

Budapest, Hungary, July 3 (AP).—Government opposition parties today demanded an active general be named national defense minister in place of Julius Goemboes, who is ill, because of "dangers which surround the country." A change was expected in several weeks.

(Goemboes is ill with a kidney ailment.)

Adm. Greenslade Sees 'Demand' For Zeppelin Transportation

Member of Navy Board Returns From Voyage on Hindenburg.

REAR ADMIRAL JOHN W. GREENSLADE.

"A definite demand" for Zeppelin transportation in the future was foreseen yesterday by Rear Admiral John W. Greenslade on his return to Washington from his observation flight aboard the giant German dirigible, Von Hindenburg.

A member of the Navy's General Board, Admiral Greenslade, is one of the five men who will be called upon in the next few months to decide whether the Navy should build a successor to the ill-fated Akron and Macon. His trip on the Hindenburg has generally been interpreted as indicating that the board expects to decide the question before the end of winter.

Two impressions of the trip were outstanding, the admiral said. First, the enthusiasm of the passengers about Zeppelin travel, and second, the skill with which the Germans rode the weather map, utilizing the weather conditions to the best possible advantage.

"What impressed me most about the trip over was the unanimity of enthusiasm among the passengers," declared the admiral. "All the passengers sitting at the captain's table with me—many of them had crossed the ocean 60 to 70 times, liked the ship. There was one old lady over 70 who was just delighted. I think there is going to be a very definite demand for that type of transportation."

"On the trip back what impressed me most," continued Commander Greenslade, "was the way the Germans used the weather conditions. Capt. Lehmann (the Zeppelin commander) took the ship several hundred miles off course into a low spot area so the ship could ride the wind. At one time the ship was racing at a speed of 150 knots, which is about 190 miles an hour. We were going so fast Lehmann wouldn't believe his own navigators.

"Coming over we looked for such a wind. As Dr. Eckner put it—I heard him repeat the remark five or six times—'We'll get on a following wind and the ship will go like a bat out of hell.' But Eckener couldn't find such a wind. The weather was mild all the way and the condition just didn't exist.

"On our way back, though, we found the wind. The interesting thing about it was that if we were crossing to Germany the ship could have gone 700 miles south and used the same wind to equal advantage. You know what a 90-knot gale will do on land. Yet we were riding this gale and you couldn't feel a thing.

"Fog doesn't seem to be a great danger to the ship. We ran through fog for hours at a time. The Germans are more weather-wise than we are. It was interesting to see how they would come down close to water to get their bearings in a fog. Most of the time they were flying by dead reckoning. When they hit a storm they also came down. The idea was that if they got under the storm they wouldn't get any downward wind, while if they rode on top of the storm, they would be blown all ways."

A former submarine commander, Greenslade pointed out that the handling of an airship was "a good deal like handling a submarine."

"The airship doesn't ride on the element but with it. The airship is the same weight as the air around it and the ship just pushes its way along. The same principle holds true with the submarine. It, too, moves with the element.

"I would think that handling a submarine would be good training for handling an airship."

Asked whether he intended to recommend to the general board that the Navy build a giant airship, Greenslade replied that his mind was "not made up yet" and that he still was studying "what modifications would be necessary to build a military airship."

"I expect to get a copy of Capt. Lehmann's book on his experiences with Zeppelins during the war and I will study that carefully," he added. "It will have a lot to do with what we finally decide.

"However, you can say that I was very favorably impressed with the Hindenburg."

Three naval officers were named yesterday by the Navy Department as observers on the next round-trip flight of the Von Hindenburg.

They are Lieut. Comdr. Cornelius V. S. Knox and Lieuts. Samuel M. Bailey and Benjamin May.

Defense Costs Will Unbalance British Budget

Chamberlain Tells House of Commons Deficit Is Practically Certain.

By the Associated Press.

London, July 3.—Britain's chancellor of the exchequer, Neville Chamberlain, gave the country a foretaste of the cost of rearmament today.

He announced in Commons a budget deficit, in view of British defense plans, is "practically certain."

Optimistically, however, the man who holds the Empire's purse strings said:

"Despite the gigantic multiplication of demands, there is no reason why this country should not be able to support them."

Confidence Held Need.

That is, he added, unless confidence is upset or undermined.

Once the necessary standard of rearmament is reached, Chamberlain told the members, "I for my part believe this country will find at its disposal sufficient resources to continue the upward march of progress."

He defended the secrecy of the defense program, pointing out, among other things, it must depend on what other nations do with scientific and tactical developments and "it is bound to change as the years go by."

Chamberlain made his announcement as the financial bill, embodying the budget proposals for the current year, was given third reading.

It was necessary, he declared, to make "this country safe" and to put it in a position to fulfill its League of Nations obligations.

He said the size of the deficit was not known yet.

"Great arrears," he added, must be made up quickly, and "during that short time we must face all together exceptionally abnormal and phenomenal rates of expenditure."

Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin, returning from the country to explain the necessity for defensive rearmament, failed to quiet rumors of his pending resignation by his statement he would retire "when I think fit."

Some of his friends suggested he must step out of office next month, after Parliament adjourns.

Chamberlain, announcing the budget last April, said the Government operated during the last fiscal year at a profit of £2,941,000 ($14,700,000).

At that time he estimated new income and tea taxes would enable Britain to counter expenses during the next 12 months of £797,897,000 ($3,989,484,000). These expenditures, he said, included £20,000,000 ($100,000,000 for defensive purposes.

Mrs. Castle Buried; Killer Hunt Futile

Chicago, July 3 (AP).—Simple funeral services were held today for Mrs. Florence Thompson Castle, 24, while the search for the person who killed her as she slept last Monday went on without a major development.

Flowers from her several husbands and from her many admirers surrounded the "night club lady's" coffin. There also was a floral offering from her 7-year-old son, Jimmy, who was beside her in bed when she was beaten to death with a brick.

The boy attended the services with his father, James Thompson, of Revere, Mass., Mrs. Castle's first husband. After the services her body was taken to Hammond, Ind., for burial in Oak Hill Cemetery.

Another offer to help in solving the mystery of her slaying came today from Mrs. Castle's brother, Fred F. Wicks, of Jersey City, N. J. Stating he knew his sister and her problems well, Wicks expressed the opinion her killing was "a premeditated crime committed by some one whom she hated and had known over a period of months."

Siamese Twin Dead; Doctors Fail to Operate

Physician HasPhotographic Record of Case; Mother Is Still Uninformed.

Medford, Mass., July 3.—Two-day-old Mary Fiorenza, who lived for 30 hours attached to her Siamese twin sister, joined her in death today.

Mary only had a chance in a million or so to live and destiny robbed her of that.

American Medical Association records show only one case where a Siamese twin survived a dead mate and that was of the much more common variety, juncture at the base of the spine.

Mary was united in death and in life to her twin by a bony tissue which held their skulls together.

So rare was that type of formation that Dr. John B. Vernaglia, 31, who delivered Mary and her sister, said no similar case was known to medicine.

Mary was born Wednesday to Mrs. Diego Fiorenza, 23-year-old Everett mother of two other and normal children, and her grocery clerk husband.

When death ended what little chance she had of survival, Dr. Vernaglia was preparing to attempt to separate her from the body of her sister.

Had Mary lived she would have shared with Marie Kellar, 9-year-old Illinois girl, the distinction of having lived after such a cleavage from a dead Siamese twin.

Marie is alive today and Dr. Paul Clark, of Marseilles, Ill., who performed the operation nine years ago, describes her as perfectly normal.

Dr. Vernaglia asserted tonight he had a photographic record of the case besides the usual medical record and that, as soon as he could prepare these, he would forward them to the American Medical Association.

Motion pictures, some of them in color, he added, recorded the history of the case, showing the infants both alive, later the one dead and the other alive, and finally the two bodies.

The infant that died first was baptised by Dr. Vernaglia. Its name was to have been Corinne. The second baby, Mary, was baptised by a Catholic priest before its death.

Dr. Vernaglia said a private funeral would be held for the twins.

Mrs. Fiorenza remained unaware tonight that she had borne the twins.

end of the wave of legislation aimed at their profession which has swept throught several States and the District.

Miles went to some length in amplifying the Legion's position.

"Tremendous efforts are being made," he said, "to deceive educators into thinking that we are trying to militarize the schools. The most often repeated charge is that the legion is trying to curb academic freedom.

"May I assure you that although once in a while a post or an individual legionnaire may object to something or other in a school, the legion is interested chiefly in helping teach children how to think.

Urges Economic Action.

"I have yet to know a teacher of the thousands of my acquaintance whom I thought was a raging red."

Americanism, Miles asserted, "does not consist of throwing children into jail because they might fail to salute the flag. And neither does Americanism consist of forcing compulsory oaths of loyalty upon any class of citizens.

"Many of the forces howling about a red scare are just as dangerous as the Communists. If the people who are always raising a red scare would stop talking and start working to eliminate our financial difficulties, we would see an end to the Communist problem."

Children Were Expelled.

Miles' condemnation of punishment for failure to salute the flag ran counter to that of Marlborough Post, No. 115, which in May urged the Prince Georges County School Board to expel four Oxon Hill school children for this offense.

The children, two sons and two daughters of August A. Lutke, Washington Postoffice employe, had refused to salute the flag because of religious beliefs. They were expelled from school after the Marlborough Post of the American Legion had made vigorous demands that they be punished.

Hitler Repeats Appeal for Peace

Weimar, Germany, July 3 (U.P.).—Chancellor Adolf Hittler, speaking at ceremonies commemorating the tenth anniversary of the Nazi Party's first legal convention tonight, reiterated his desire for peace with all nations.

Der Fuehrer's declaration was regarded as particularly significant as it came on the eve of the League Council's meeting to discuss alleged Nazi attempts to divorce Danzig from the League and join it with Germany, and at a time when other European powers are hastening to consideration of the Rhineland crisis.

"We are convinced that peace is impossible without honor and freedom," Hitler said.

"Our nation must know this and we want outside nations to know it as well.

"I believe that clarity on this point more than anything else is needed to dissipate false hopes and opinions which are not serving the cause of real peace."

Dr. C. C. Vinton Dies; Body Claimed by Son

New York, July 3 (AP).—The death June 26 of Dr. Cadwallader Curry Vinton, 80, member of the American Academy of Medicine and once prominent in medical circles, became known today when the body was claimed by a son, H. C. Vinton, of Seattle Wash.

Dr. Vinton died in Bellevue Hospital following a heart attack.

Dr. Vinton was a former managing editor of the Journal of Physical Therapeutics and at one time was treasurer of the American Physical Therapy Association.

With his vacation ended, the Republican presidential nominee is now preparing for the services at which he will accept the nomination. He was pictured on the porch of his mountain cabin chatting with Senator Robert D. Carey, of Wyoming, with whom he discussed reclamation.

Landon Works On Speech, Sees Finances Chief

Farm and Money Problems Foreseen as Topics; Off for Home Today.

By the Associated Press.

Estes Park, Colo., July 3.—Gov. Alf M. Landon of Kansas and his campaign advisers polished the first draft of the Republican presidential nominee's acceptance speech today, then plunged into a conference with W. B. Bell, chairman of the Republican finance committee.

The conferees met over a luncheon table at the McGraw ranch, where Landon is vacationing.

The Governor intends to leave at about noon tomorrow for Denver, where he will board a train for Kansas.

Finances Undiscussed.

Chairman Bell said he had not yet discussed finances with the nominee. They planned to confer further before the Governor's departure.

Landon reserved replies to two invitations—to speak at the Colorado State fair August 24-28 at Pueblo, and to speak at River View Park, Chicago, Labor Day, September 7.

He and his staff devoted the morning to work on the speech which will open Landon's campaign formally July 23 at Topeka, Kans.

Taft, Robey Attend.

In the conference were Charles P. Taft, son of the late President and an authority on municipal government; Earl H. Taylor, former associate editor of a national farm weekly; Ralph West Robey, Columbia University economist and monetray adviser, and E. Ross Bartley, the Governor's press relations secretary.

Their presence suggested the acceptance speech will deal at length with the agricultural and money problems, subjects which Landon thus far has not discussed in detail publicly.

Bell brought the latest report of the national party treasury and prospects for the campaign.

A group of Colorado Republicans, headed by former Senator Lawrence C. Phipps, now Colorado national committeeman, attended the luncheon.

Topeka, July 3 (AP).—As the deadline for Kansas voters to change parties for the August primary was reached today, incomplete reports from 12 counties showed 4,803 voters formerly registered as Republicans had switched affiliations while 959 Democrats had re-registered as Republicans.

The 12 included the four larger counties of Wyandotte, Sedgwick, Shawnee and Reno, where changes were 3,901 to Democrat and 556 to Republican.

Guy T. Helvering, Kansas Democratic leader, said last week the changes indicated increased support for President Roosevelt in the home State of Gov. Alf M. Landon, Republican Presidential nominee.

At Wichita, Leslie Edmonds, prominent Republican, said the changes were made by Townsend advocates who wished to support Dempster Potts, a Townsendite, seeking the Democratic nomination for United States Senator in the Democratic primary, but that they would "be back to Landon and other Republican candidates in November."

mission authorized railroads to transport hay and other forages from Colorado and Nebraska to points in Montana and Wyoming, at reduced freight charges. The commission said "immediate measures of relief" were necessary "to avoid loss of livestock and to prevent general suffering."

Jesse W. Tapp, chairman of the agriculture drought committee, announced establishment of a Federal Livestock and Fred Agency with headquarters at Kansas City to serve as a clearing house for information to aid farmers in the Midwestern drought areas. Main concern of the agency, similar to one operated in 1934, will be to locate surplus feed supplies and aid in the sale and transfer of livestock from the drought regions. E. O. Pollock, extension hay specialist, will be in charge.

Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, who Thursday authorized Government purchase of up to 1,000,000 drought cattle, in St. Paul yesterday suggested crop insurance, with premiums paid in kind, as a possible protection against crop failure. Associated Press dispatches said. A wheat farmer, for example, could pay wheat premiums when he had good crops, receiving insurance when crops failed. Wallace emphasized that it was merely a "suggestion."

Private crop estimates from Chicago placed the domestic spring wheat yield at an average of 134,000,000 bushels and winter wheat at 497,000,000, or a total of 631,000,000 bushels. This compared with average yields predicted privately a month ago of 737,000,000 bushels, and allowed for a loss of 106,000,000 from drought damage.

Unfavorable world wheat reports continued. Aside from the spreading Canadian drought, the Bureau of Agricultural Economics received preliminary United Kingdom estimates. These placed the wheat yield in England and Wales, Scotland, and Northern Ireland at 58,000,000 bushels, compared with 65,400,000 bushels last year, and 69,800,000 two years ago.

On Wednesday the Bureau of Agricultural Economics placed the July 1 wheat surplus in principal exporting countries—Argentina, Australia, Canada and the United States—as well as the total world carryover, at the lowest point in nine years.

The surplus in principal exporting countries was estimated at about 388,000,000 bushels, compared with 532,000,000 bushels a year ago, and 741,000,000 bushels in 1934. Total world carryover of wheat was estimated at 635,000,000 bushels, against 956,000,000 bushels a year ago, and 1,109,000,000 bushels two years ago.

Price of Meats To Rise if Corn Supply Is Short

Effect of Drought on Crop Now Being Studied by U. S. Economists.

By the Associated Press.

Agriculture Department economists, boring into a labyrinth of food price factors, yesterday termed the prospective supply of corn as a feed for meat animals the master key to the drought's effect on table expenses.

As in 1934, they said, if feed supplies are drastically reduced, the consumer will be touched first by an increasing cost for meat.

In that year, they recalled, corn received no rain in May and June. But hope was held for life-saving downpours in July. The late rains did not come.

Again May and June have parched the cornfields and hope for heavy yields once more are pinned on July precipitation. The outcome of the corn crop will be determined within the next three weeks, and a fair insight into feed and food supplies in general will be provided by the Government's crop forecast on July 10.

Secretary Wallace's program of buying 100,000,000 drought distressed cattle, they expected, would be reflected chiefly in firmer farm values for foundation herds.

Comparing the situation to 1934, they related that manufactured cereal prices remained fairly steady during the drought and that a delayed, moderate rise of 15 per cent from rather low levels occurred in the prices of dairy and poultry products in late 1934 and early 1935.

The real impact on the consumers' purchases was produced by meat prices which rose from the middle of 1934 to the middle of 1935, then eased off from August, 1935, to the present time. Peak prices were not reached until supplies created by heavy slaughter of hogs and cattle had been exhausted.

Thus far, it was pointed out, the drought has settled chiefly on grain producing areas. The big dairy products States, Wisconsin, Michigan and Minnesota, have not suffered much and drought effects on dairy market prices are expected to be confined principally to whatever rise is caused in feed costs.

Potato prices are expected to be considerably lower than last month, but higher than last year. There was an unusual shortage of both new and old crop potatoes in June, but a seasonal increase in marketing now is in progress.

Mrs. Hewitt Rests At Jersey Resort

Jersey City, N. J., July 3 (AP).—Mrs. Maryon Cooper Hewitt, under $3,500 bail on charges of being a fugitive and attempting suicide, was in seclusion tonight after leaving Medical Center Hospital.

She had been a patient at the hospital since February, when she took an overdose of a sedative with what police charged was suicidal intent.

Mrs. Hewitt is accused in California of conspiring to have a sterilization operation performed on her heiress daughter, Ann Cooper Hewitt.

She left the hospital by automobile late last night, and was reported to have gone to a New Jersey shore resort.

After 12 postponed hearings, Mrs. Hewitt appeared Wednesday before Police Judge Anthony Botti, who deferred formal arraignment until September, when the Hudson County grand jury will convene. She appeared weak and pale at that time, and Dr. George O'Hanlon, Medical director, had quoted her as saying she intended to remain at the hospital for a few more days.

but one shot. He explained he received the other during the World War.

Miss Hesselgren, in her speech, told the statesmen frankly she had "listened to all your speeches and have found no ray of hope in them."

The reality which unfortunately must be faced, she said, is that "50 nations are letting one small one fall. How can any small nation henceforth have any hope?

"Might not this readiness to sacrifice a small and weak victim really turn war loose in deadly earnest?"

Delbos told the Assembly France planned to establish new treaties and make existing treaties stronger. He urged the requirement for a unanimous vote of the Council be eliminated from Article XI of the Covenant in consideration of matters to safeguard peace.

Apprehension Expressed.

Other speakers included Dr. Halvdan Koht, Norway's foreign minister, who expressed apprehension at "the menace that lurks in regional pacts," and Narcisso Bassolls, of Mexico, who said his country viewed the future of peace machinery fearfully, but added he did not wish to intimate Mexico was contemplating resignation from the League.

Koht urged the statesmen to turn their attention before it is too late to the "safety valve" of the Covenant—Article XIX, which provides for peaceful revision of situations likely to lead to war.

Pending revision of the Dardanelles Treaty, he said, was a step in the right direction.

Van Zeeland announced the Italo-Ethiopian discussion closed and asked the drafting committee to frame a resolution.

Assembly leaders were struggling over the way the resolution is to deal with Italy's annexation of Ethiopia. Latin-Americans under the leadership of Argentina, were working for a text which would condemn all annexations achieved by force. European statesmen generally wanted to soften the text so Italy would not be wounded to the point of leaving the League.

Mexico Won't Vote.

Mexico announced she would abstain from voting on the resolution because of her dissatisfaction with the "intentions and decisions" of a majority of states in regard to the Italo-Ethiopian situation.

Lifting of sanctions, perhaps July 10, has been taken as a foregone conclusion.

The steering committee struggled over the text of the resolution until late tonight, without a general agreement on its contents, except for the lifting of sanctions.

Latin-American delegates said there seemed to be a feeling the American doctrine of nonrecognition of territories acquired by force should be incorporated in a form harmonious with the League Covenant.

France Moves To Halt Rioting In North Africa

Invokes Colonial Measures; Algerian Situation Becomes Calmer.

By the Associated Press.

Paris, July 3.—France's Leftist government invoked "colonial measures" to halt conflicts in its North African territories tonight while striking farmers commanded attention at home.

Reports of anti-Semitic rioting in Tunisia coincided with a controversy between Leftists and Rightists over responsibility for the disturbances which included strike disorders in Algeria.

Governor General Le Beau, of Algeria, reported on the North African situation to Premier Leon Blum and Roger Salengro, minister of the interior.

Following his visit well-informed sources said "important measures were taken to avoid a recurrence of the incidents."

The measures included an appeal by native leaders to followers: "We beseech you not to listen to agitators. Have confidence in your distinguished governor general and the government of the People's Front."

The nature of the further measures taken was not disclosed.

Le Beau reported the Algerian situation was much calmer.

"Almost all the strikes and conflicts in Algeria," he said, "are in the course of arbitration. I am distinctly optimistic the agitation manifested recently will not be slow in calming."

The anti-Jewish rioting in Tunisia provoked a press controversy. Premier Blum's organ, La Populaire, said;

"We denounce the persons responsible for this tension, first the misery engendered by a barbarous regime the capital imposes on the natives, and then the campaign of agitation conducted by French Fascists and agents in the capital to divert the anger of the masses by arousing hatred of races."

The Rightist press countered with charges Communist agitation was responsible for the difficulties.

Meanwhile, the Chamber of Deputies turned its attention to French agricultural legislation at home, while police halted clashes between farm hands and their employers in the rural vineyard district near Laon.

Troops Rushed to Aid.

Sousse, Tunisia, July 3 (AP).—Moslem assaults on Jews in which one person was reported slain and several wounded, sent troop reinforcements speeding to Sousse and Gafsa in this French protectorate tonight.

Jewish stores were sacked in both cities.

In Sousse, Jewish merchants barricaded themselves in their shops and fought off attacking Mohammedans with rifle and pistol fire. Order was re-established during the morning, but not until three persons—a Senegalese tirailleur, a policeman and a Moslem, had been wounded.

Troops seized control of the situation in Gafsa, in west-central Tunisia, with reinforcements coming from Sfax, on the east coast.

Rock Stops Train Of Queen Marie

Lille, France, July 3 (AP).—A flying rock struck an engineer on the head today, stopping the train carrying the Dowager Queen Marie of Rumania. Police declared it "a simple accident."

"A nonessential section of the machinery became detached, fell on the gravel and threw up stones, which injured the engineer slightly," the prefecture announced, following a quick investigation.

The train was only slightly delayed and the same engineer took it on to Calais. There Queen Marie, her daughter and son-in-law, the Archduke and Archduchess Anton (formerly Princess Ileana), and their three children embarked for London.

Gendarmes had been guarding the right of way, and one asserted before the investigation he saw a stone thrown from beside the tracks.

2 Stage Bloodless Duel, And Emerge as Friends

Budapest, Hungary, July 3 (AP).—Two Hungarian Parliament members stepped off 30 paces in a pistol duel and emerged tonight unscathed, friends.

One of them, Count George Apponyi, Liberal, and son of Hungary's Grand Old Man, the late Count Albert, had accused Victor Karolyi, Conservative member, of Nazi sympathies.

Karolyi retaliated by saying Count Apponyi was a Liberal Party servant for selfish reasons. The bloodless duel resulted.

Gen. Stephen Horthy, brother of the regent, Admiral Nicholas von Horthy, was among the distinguished seconds for the duel.

Capital Society Abandons City Over Holiday

Seashore and the Mountains Attract Diplomatic Set and Others.

Washington touches the low mark in population every July 4 and already a large majority of diplomats and residents are at mountain or seashore resorts for the holiday.

Long Island is always popular with Washingtonians, and this year many from the Capital have gone there. The Ambassador of Argentina and Mme. de Espil are guests of Mr. and Mrs. George Ingalls Sloane, and will return to the Capital next week for only a few days before leaving to spend the summer at Hot Springs, Va. The Minister of Rumania, Mr. Charles Davila, also is spending Independence Day with friends on Long Island, and will return the first of the week.

The chancery of the French Embassy is almost deserted over the holiday. The Charge d'Affaires, Mr. Jules Henry, is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Donald O. MacRae at their Newport home, Easterly. The second secretary of the French Embassy, Mr. Claude de Boisanger, with the Attache of the embassy, Mr. Charles Lucet, has motored to Ashville, N. C., to see the rhododendrons in bloom. Mr. de Boisanger is a diplomat who is keenly interested in the American countryside, and last year took one trip to see the autumn maples in New England and another to view the azaleas in South Carolina.

The Ambassador of Spain and Senora de Calderson are spending a few days at White Sulphur Springs, in the mountains of West Virginia.

Mrs. Fleming Newbold, who has a cottage at Hot Springs, has as her guests over the holiday her daughter, Miss Nancy Newbold, and her grandchildren, Nancy and Allen Ryan, children of Mr. and Mrs. Allan A. Ryan, jr., of New York.

The usual week-end exodus from Washington to Bluemont will be even greater over the holiday. The Italian Ambassador, Signor Augusto Rosso, will join his sister, Signora Teresa Scurci, and his young nephew, Paulo, at his summer home there. The Brazilian Ambassador, Mr. Oswaldo Aranha, is with Mme. Aranha at their residence there, and Representative and Mrs. Sol Bloom, with their daughter, Miss Vera Bloom, left yesterday to occupy the home of Mrs. A. M. Speer at Bluemont, which they have leased for the summer.

The Counselor of the Hungarian Legation, Mr. Anthony de Balasy, left by train last night for a vacation in Canada. He will visit Montreal, Ottawa and Quebec, and plans to take a cruise along the Saguenay River. He will return to Washington in time to take over his duties as charge d'affaires, as the Minister and Mme. Pelenyi are leaving shortly for Hungary, and he will occupy the legation on Eighteenth street this summer as he did last.

The Secretary of State and Mrs. Cordell Hull are among the few who are spending the holiday week-end in Washington. However, they do not mind, for their apartment at the Carlton was completely air-conditioned while they were in Atlantic City and they plan to spend the greater part of the summer there.

In the party were Mr. and Mrs. Richardson, Mr. and Mrs. Graham, Representative and Mrs. Harry L. Englebright, Mr. and Mrs. A. Dennis Lewis, Dr. and Mrs. F. Flavelle Koss, Mr. and Mrs. Dwight Galt, Mr. and Mrs. William Mark Conrad, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Highfield, Commander and Mrs. John A. Hollowell, Mrs. Neitah King, Miss Randolph Richardson, Miss Clara Margaret Grantham, Miss Genevieve Marsh, Miss Yvonne Christian, Mr. Charles McDaniel, Mr. John Chappelear, Mr. William Wimsatt, Mr. Sidney Smith and Mr. Harry Smith.

Julia Ruth Fick Wed to Mr. Baker

Couple Leaves on Trip to North Carolina.

Miss Julia Ruth Fick, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick A. Fick, of Washington and Virginia, became the bride of Mr. John Davis Baker, son of Mrs. Sue Baker, of Anson, Tex., yesterday at 8 p. m. in the Eastern Presbyterian Church. The Rev. Dr. Alfred E. Barrows officiated.

The bride was attended by her sister, Mrs. Hardy Pierce, as matron of honor, and Mrs. Troas Dike, Miss Mary D. Pruitt and Miss Jane Hughes, as bridesmaids. The best man was Mr. Christopher A. Doose, of Ballinger, Tex. The ushers were Mr. Troas Dike, of Livingston, Tex.; Mr. H. Lee Carlin, of Joplin, Mo., and Mr. Finis Parrish and Mr. Willard Parrish, of Livingston, Tex.

Things That Make Women More Beautiful

Herb-Scented Lotion Softens Both Face and Hands.

(The Mignon who writes this column does not sell, indorse or manufacture any cosmetics.)

By Mignon.

THERE are hand lotions, hand balms, hand creams and hand masks, but I have yet to find anything which comes nearer to perfection than an herbal balm which softens, smoothes and whitens hands. The balm is the consistency of a thick cream which can be poured.

After washing the hands the balm is massaged into the skin, is quickly absorbed and cleans without water if you use plenty of it. Wipe it off at once with tissues. Of course, you don't use it as a cleanser if you wash the hands with soap and water. The best way, I think, is to use it as a night treatment on hands, arms and elbows, leaving it on until morning. You will not have to wash it off because it soaks in quickly.

This lotion may be used as a powder foundation. The scent of the herbs used in it is really delicious. It is one of those things you can't describe, but neither can you fail to be enthusiastic about it. The bottle isn't very large and it isn't very expensive, but I am quite sure that you will feel it is worth what it costs because of what it will do for you.

Today's HEALTH TALK

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

At best, noise is disconcerting, annoying, disagreeable, except on occasions when it expresses the heights of emotion—joy and elation. We celebrate the dawn of American independence with the burning of much gunpowder. It is the one time in the year when we voice our unswerving devotion to the ideals of those who, with high courage and far-sighted wisdom, framed the Constitution and laid the foundations of our Government. Let patriotic vociferousness be the rule on the birthday of the Nation!

Purposeless boisterousness on the part of human beings nowadays is usually a manifestation of lack of control. But it is the incessant, continuous, day-in-and-day-out roar and rumble that constitute a real menace not only to the delicate machinery of the ear but to the general health. Several years ago the British Medical Association resolved unanimously to support all measures for the suppression of unnecessary din. The resolution stated categorically that extraneous, raucous sounds may be termed a nuisance within the meaning of the public health act.

City dwellers have become accustomed to a certain amount of noise, but not without paying a price. Nervous systems have been damaged, ears have been injured and a large population has been compelled to exist in a situation needlessly hazardous. The incessant sounding of motor-car horns, the clanging of street-car bells, the noises of trucks with loads unevenly balanced, the shouts of vendors, all lead us to pray, "From the unnecessary clatter of human activities, good Lord, deliver us!"

It is possible to cultivate tolerance for noise, but in doing so sensitivity to delicate sounds is lost. Some people are actually unhappy unless they are surrounded by hubbub that is more or less continuous; in other words, the party is a failure unless it is a "riot" from start to finish. Such people wear out quickly, develop neuroses, or acquire a sort of petrified nervous system.

It has been shown that constant noise produces thickening of the drum membranes of the ears. Thus they become less resilient, less capable of movement. Furthermore, the nerve of hearing is exhausted with repeated assaults of sound. These are real factors in the production of partial deafness. Factory workers occasionally find great relief through plugging the external ear canals with bits of cotton. The sudden bursting of an inflated paper bag, in the vicinity of almost any one, will raise the blood pressure in the brain to four times its normal level for several seconds.

Crepe Paper Hat to Combat the Sun

Women have given up their knitting for the time being and have gone back to making clever summer hats of crepe paper. It is not only an interesting pastime, but unusually smart hats can be easily and rapidly made for very little money. The only materials needed are a roll of the crepe paper (which is braided before fashioning), a tapestry needle and the chosen trimming. Crepe paper now comes in a grand array of all the standard and high fashion colors and the woman who is ingenious can plan chic and unique color themes for her "self-made" hats. The wide-brimmed model shown above is ideal to protect the eyes from the summer sun—it is also cool and as light as a breeze on the head. Dubonnet, blue bonnet blue and white were chosen for this hat, with a Dubonnet grosgrain band and bunch of flowers repeating the tri-color scheme. Directions for making may be had by writing The Post Fashion Editor, inclosing a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

Feminine Vice Presidential Aspirant for 1940 Should Take Training in Hollywood

By Malvina Lindsay,
Woman's Page Editor.

AFTER ALL, perhaps, it is just as well that there won't be a woman candidate for Vice President in the next election. Aside from the fact that there has not yet been developed any great stateswoman particularly fitted for the job, it is also true that the strain of campaigning on a national ticket would put almost any feminine spellbinder in a sanitarium by November.

Running for Vice President is a comparatively simple thing for a man. All he has to do is to prove he is a simple unaffected fellow, preferably "plain as an old shoe," and that he likes to fish or play poker.

But consider the plight of a woman Vice Presidential candidate? Granting that she could be that rare creature who would be dumb enough not to alienate the men and yet bright enough to please the women, she would yet face the problem of becoming a human chameleon as she campaigned from coast to coast.

Being all things to all women is much more difficult than being all things to all men. Men voters are like husbands—pretty much alike—and not any too critical of their kind. But women, both as individuals and as voters, are much more variable.

• • • •

IT IS TRUE that many women candidates have campaigned successfully for State offices. But pleasing a nation—particularly a nation's womanhood—is another matter. Despite movies, radios, motor cars, all the phases of the higher civilization, the women of New York and Centerville do not yet see eye to eye on a lot of the little details that enter into one woman's esimate of another. Saying "ayther" and "bean" would not help an Eastern candidate in the Middle West; scorning the broad "a" would not send her stock up in many Eastern circles. If she were endowed with the graces of a Southern belle, she might be ridiculed by Northern sophisticates; if she were a brusque go-getter, she might be a flop at a Georgia barbecue.

The matter of wardrobe alone would present a great problem. In order to meet varying feminine standards she would have to carry as many changes as a leading lady with a stock company She would have to be able to appear as equally at home in a house dress and a hat with tulips as in a backless Paris gown.

• • • •

HER LIST of feminine accomplishments would needs be unending. It goes without saying she would have to be an expert knitter and crocheter. Naturally her campaign manager would want to announce that she made all her own clothes and was a champion cook of Boston baked beans, Maryland fried chicken, Iowa corn fritters and California date pudding. She would have to be an expert bridge player, a seasoned tea pourer, an experienced Sunday school teacher, a practiced club parliamentarian and toastmistress, an exponent of progressive education, a collector of antiques, an authority on the restoration of old houses, a raiser of prize-winning turnips and dahlias, a book reviewer, a patron of folk arts and crafts and preferably the mother of 13 children.

Possibly the only advantage she would possess over a man candidate is that probably no one would raise the issue of just how she treated her husband.

Several feminine leaders recently have pointed out that women, if they want a Vice Presidential candidate in 1940, should start now developing one who, within four years, would attain the necessary political experience and statesmanship. That is indeed true. But the candidate who goes into such training should not cultivate statesmanship too much at the expense of the smaller personal accomplishments—the things on which elections are lost or won. And to obtain such training an ideal school suggests itself—Hollywood.

Problem Solved By Desk Machine

Serves Dual Purpose in Small Apartment.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Chicago, Ill., July 2.—With the passing of the old-fashioned sewing room, a corner to tuck away a machine frequently creates a major problem in the small apartment or home where every piece of furniture is placed with an eye to its decorative value.

Designed to solve just such problems is a new desk-machine being shown at the first International Housefurnishings Exposition in the Merchandise Mart here.

Styled on simple modern lines, the machine is of the drop-head type and when closed makes a good looking and practical knee-hole desk, fitted with four drawers. The desk is being shown in a number of different finishes and is not too modernistically styled to be out of place in rooms which pay tribute to other eras.

And Call It Accident

By Mrs. Belloc Lowndes

CHAPTER XXIII.

"WHAT IS IT you're afraid of?"

"I don't say that I'm exactly afraid of anything. But still there may be trouble where you've electricity and water close together, my lord, though people have got so used to it, in a way, that they don't realize the danger. I shouldn't have known how badly the work had been done if it hadn't been that now and again Miss Starling can't have her bath because the water stops running. It was Miss Bates, the captain's stepdaughter, who came up and told me about it one morning. She thought I could put it right, and of course I did. But when I went into it all, I was staggered to see the kind of pipes that had been laid. Now this afternoon the captain and the ladies are out with Parson's sons, and I was thinking of going down to the annex and having another look around. Maybe you wouldn't mind coming with me? I understand that her ladyship has paid for most of it."

John Pendervil smiled. It was he who had paid for all of it. But he left the half question unanswered.

A few moments later they had gone down the steps which led down to the shore, and were standing outside the annex.

And a moment later Lord John stood alone in the pretty bedroom, for his companion had gone straight on into the bathroom.

He looked round with a sensation of reverence and deep emotion. Everything there evoked the personality of the girl he now loved with all his heart and soul. There was something so dainty, so delicately pure and feminine in the simple little apartment. On the small four-post bed was an exquisite silk embroidered coverlet; spring flowers in their natural, though now slightly faded, colors, were as though scattered on a deep cream ground. And though the design was different, the calendered chintz curtains recalled the coverlet.

Suddenly Lord John went up to the dressing table. But when there he did not look at the amber tortoise shell brushes, and funny old painted powder box. He simply stared at the reflection of himself.

And as he gazed at his homely face, there came a piteous look of suffering, aye, and of resignation, over his face. He told himself that he was indeed a presumptuous fool to have supposed, even for a moment, that such a girl as Ruth Starling, with everything that life could offer her, would consider for a moment becoming his wife. He know her too well, there was a certain acid comfort in the thought to suspect her capable of considering the worldly advantages of such a marriage.

A slight groan escaped him and Troutbeck's surprised face appeared at the door of the bathroom, "Did you say anything, my lord?"

"I had just a twinge of rheumatism, for that slight war wound of long ago, Troutbeck, reminds me now and again that I'm growing old."

"Maybe you wouldn't mind coming in here for a minute or two? I think I can explain what's wrong, though the trouble is I don't quite know how it's going to be put right. Unless, of course, the work is begun all over again, and that would mean Miss Starling's going back into the castle for a bit; she wouldn't like that, I reckon."

Lord John went in to the bathroom and listened silently to the technical details, paying, as he remembered later, far too scant attention to what he was being told.

Then, all at once, he did listen, and this is what heard, "I told Capt. Trefane more than once that it would be quite easy to put a temporary tank on the top of the tower and run the water up and down outside the room next door where Miss Starling was then sleeping. To do that would have made no odds anyway and both the tank and the pipes could have been taken down in a few hours once the castle was empty again. But no, the captain was quite set on the bathroom being fixed here in the annex and, of course, Mrs. Trefane said ditto."

"Why should they care?" And indeed Lord John could not imagine why the Trefanes should have wished Ruth to move in here.

"Maybe they were afraid of her ladyship. She can't bear any tinkering with the castle, my lord."

The two men smiled at one another. It was true that Lady Cicester, though a devotee of a rather stuffy kind of mid-Victorian comfort, considered that medieval conditions, both in kitchen and parlor, were good enough for anyone who either took Perranuth Castle or, as in the present case, who was lent it.

Her son exclaimed now, "As to this place, the one point to consider is whether its really safe! If there's any doubt about that the work will have to be done again, of course."

"It's been safe up to now, though I did say to the captain the other day that the builder had no right to put in electric power in anything but lead piping. Legally speaking, my lord, they ought not to have done so. And if the inspector comes this way there will be trouble. I even spoke to Mrs. Trefane, for she's a reasonable lady, but the captain told her the business had cost him and the young lady a pretty penny already and he didn't see the necessity for those sort of pipes. The more so that he supposed her ladyship would want them taken away after they've gone to London."

The man to whom those words were spoken felt a sudden surge of angry disgust. Philip Trefane had not paid a penny of the cost of putting in the bathroom, and neither, so he naturally supposed, for the matter of that, had Ruth Starling. Also, the work done was to remain as it would make the annex easier to let. However, Philip Trefane had always been an incurable liar and boaster.

"Look here, Troutbeck! You need not speak to the captain of the matter till the work is started and I will give you my own check for whatever work you think ought to be done. Also I want it done at once. It's too bad that Miss Starling should not be made thoroughly comfortable. I can't imagine, after what you say, why the bathroom was not put into the castle."

Lord John turned away, and this time he did not linger in the charming bedroom. He knew he would never forget the few minutes he had spent there and that always the memory of it would abide with him.

"When will you be beginning the work?" he asked. Not that he really wanted to know, it was more for something to say that he asked the question.

"I'm afraid I'll have to wait till the day after tomorrow, my lord. But I'll motor into St. Ives this evening and get in touch with a big builder who's there. Maybe I'll have to ask Miss Starling to spend one night in the castle, but I'll get the men at work quite early tomorrow and the job won't take long."

When the three of them, the Trefanes and Ruth, were at dinner that evening, Iris observed, "That horrid old Troutbeck asked to speak to me just after we'd come back, Phil. He says there's something wrong with the way the electric power is fixed in the annex and he declares our builder ought to have put in lead piping."

The captain looked up with a gleam of anger in his light eyes.

"What perfect rot!" he exclaimed. "I hope he hasn't said anything to my aunt or John."

"He has to John, worse luck, and apparently John said it was to be done. It was all fixed up this afternoon. However," she added soothingly, "it won't take long, though I'm afraid Ruth will have to sleep one night in the castle."

"D'you mean tonight?" asked her husband, and she saw that he looked furiously angry.

"No. If she has to do so at all it will be tomorrow night."

"I should like to choke Troutbeck! I consider it was most impertinent of him to speak to John. It's no business of his, anyway."

"I shan't mind coming back for one night," said Ruth, soothingly, "though I've got ever so fond of my funny little home."

She was telling herself that she must convey this ill news to Helen Bates, though of course nothing would have to be done to the studio. She went on: "The water wouldn't run one morning, though the electric geyser was flaring away like anything."

"Then did you tell Troutbeck?"

The question was put in an unpleasant tone.

Ruth laughed. "I haven't seen Troutbeck for ever so long."

"Then who did tell him?"

"Helen Bates must have told him," said Iris quickly. "When she's not in the studio she is in the flower garden, for she has a mania for gardening."

"Then we've got to thank that little brute Helen for all this upset?"

"There won't be any upset, Philip," said Ruth eagerly. "I think it was my fault your stepdaughter spoke to Troutbeck. I was about to dress for dinner and I was rather frightened at the flaring up of the geyser. Perhaps I ought to have told you about it."

"I wish you had," he said coldly.

Philip was asking himself with some anxiety whether the builder would ever give him away and admit that he, the captain, had been told the state of the law and that he had refused to follow the law, as the bathroom was only to be a temporary affair. The builder had fallen in with what he had been told, the more willingly as the profit was much larger on the old kind of piping than on the new.

But by the end of the short evening Philip had quite recovered his temper and to his wife's satisfaction he even went at some length into the question of casting the minor characters of Ruth's play. Also, fetching paper and pencil, he roughed out a clever set which could be built in without much trouble and expense. They sat up later than usual and at last, when they were all ready for bed, he escorted his paying guest to the annex with a storm lamp Iris had found in one of the kitchen cupboards. On his return he exclaimed, "You're right as usual. Ruth is quite a good sort, sweetheart! I feel I may like her, in time."

Travel Advice Is Important For Children

Mothers Urged to Teach Various Phases of Trips From Home.

By Alice Clarissa Richmond.

TO TRAVEL easily and well is an art. It needs to be taught like table manners and games. Some people make a chore of it, and are a nuisance to themselves and to others by their clumsiness and ungraciousness in getting about and meeting new situations and strange people.

Many people dread journeys because they do not know how to make reservations, when and how much to tip, what and how to order at restaurants. They have never been taught. Others object to new foods, cannot sleep in strange beds, are afraid of asking the simplest questions, complain of everything new and different. They have had no experience.

Few people realize the need of teaching their children these things.

The earliest lesson is to put up with things graciously. Tommy, at the hotel breakfast, wants cereal, and when it comes does not like the way it is cooked. This is not the moment to sympathize with him and try to persuade the management to prepare a special dish for Tommy. Let him go hungry if he refuses to eat what is given, and be sure that he understands that when one travels one adjusts to conditions without complaint.

When Tommy is a little older, explain to him about tips, let him make some of the arrangements for accommodations, handle baggage, buy tickets, or inquire about garages and directions.

Travel is a great educator, but half the benefit is lost if one is merely a passive observer.

Frozen Dessert Quickly Prepared

Broken Macaroons Used in New Recipe.

Here is a quickly prepared frozen dessert that uses leftover or broken macaroons to their best possible advantage.

Blend 2-3 cup sweetened condensed milk and ½ cup water thoroughly. Add 1 cup crushed strawberries or raspberries sweetened with ¼ cup confectioner's sugar. If berries are very sweet use less sugar, according to taste. Chill this mixture. Whip 1 cup of cream until of custard-like consistency and fold into chilled mixture. Pour into freezing pan with cold control set at top speed.

After mixture is about half frozen remove from refrigerator. Scrape mixture from sides and bottom of pan. Beat until smooth but not melted. Fold in 2-3 cup macaroon crumbs rolled very fine smooth out and replace in freezing until frozen for serving. This amount serves 6.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

After Year's Hand-Waving Flirtation With Boy, Girl Asks How to Launch Acquaintanceship.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: For nearly a year now I have been waving at a young fellow. He is a very good looking, clean, neat and respectable in appearance. We wave to each other two and sometimes four times a day, as he goes by on his way to work. My people seem to think him a nice boy and yet some of my friends who know him think differently. I like him real well and he seems to like me, but he has never tried to see me or even to hold a conversation with me.

• • • •

I know where he lives and what his name is, and he knows who I am. I am considered rather nice looking, have nice manners and dress to the best of my means. I get so lonesome at time (for I have no beau) that I would like to know this boy and enjoy his company. What seems so funny is this: he gets mad when I don't watch for and wave to him. I can tell because of the look on his face.

• • • •

So I am writing to you to find out what to do: whether to take the first step toward making his acquaintance, or whether to let him make it. Sincerely yours, M. E. P.

Some Suggestions.

DEAR M. E. P.: I note by the postmark on your letter that you live in a village. Having lived some part of my life in a village, I fully comprehend the tragic-comic nuances of this most elusive courting game in which you are now involved.

Had you thought of doing an errand to the downtown or shopping section of the village at an hour which might bring you face to face with the young man on the street? This might be at noon or in the evening, and when you meet him face to face, you might smile at him in a pleasant and friendly fashion and murmur, "How do you do, Mr. Blank," or, "Good evening, Mr. Blank," depending on the hour of day. Or if you are just a school girl and he only a few years older—and you are confident each knows the other's name—you might use his given name in pronouncing the greeting.

If, after such a display of friendliness on your part, he still fails to take the initiative in making better acquaintance possible, I would advise you to stop waving at him altogether. If that little gesture of interest and attention holds any significance for him, it is very likely its disappearance will so pique his curiosity that he will make the effort to get better acquainted and learn why you have hauled in the high-sign.

• • • •

I am sorry you are so lonely for congenial companionship that you set such store by so fleeting a glimpse of potential romance. Isn't it at all possible for you to get out with other boys and girls so that you won't be at home watching at the window when the boy goes by? I feel sure you would not find it hard to dismiss him from your mind if you had some more tangible companionship to fall back on. It really is important to your happiness that you outgrow this unreal and dreamlike preoccupation with a person you do not know. If actual acquaintanceship cannot be gracefully developed along the lines herewith suggested, I advise you to dismiss this passerby from your mind. M. H.

"Terrible Social Error?"

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I would appreciate a reply to my question as soon as possible. The middle of June I had a rather large church wedding. In the wedding party was a matron of honor, two bridesmaids, four ushers, a best man, and, of course, the bridegroom. Ever since the wedding day I have had some rather unpleasant remarks made about my wedding, because I had the men wear formal clothes—in fact, tails. If I made such a terrible social error, please let me know the truth. Oh, yes, I forgot to say the wedding took place at 8 o'clock in the evening. Thanking you for your opinion, I am, sincerely, RECENT BRIDE.

DEAR RECENT BRIDE: This newspaper's authority on etiquette, Miss Margaret Wallace, who knows both the letter and the spirit of best social usage (and who is herself the product of generations of gracious living) assures me you displayed impeccable taste and did the technically correct thing in having the men members of your wedding party wear formal evening clothes for a church wedding solemnized at 8 o'clock in the evening.

• • • •

She points out, however, that the tropic weather of Washington's summers has played an important part in bringing about an adaptation of this one-time rigorous rule, so that nowadays it is also considered quite correct for men to wear white suits for summer weddings of even the formal type. Therefore, because white suits have become more or less customary wear even for church weddings during the sultry months, it may be your critics assumed tails were incorrect. Nevertheless, tails are always correct for a formal evening event. M. H.

Fresh Plums Make Tasty Pie and Cake

The Fruit, However, Seems to Be Ignored on Most Menus.

By Dorothea Duncan.

YESTERDAY'S trip to the market made me realize that something should be done to exploit the merits of the fresh plum. I am not limiting the popularization of fresh plums to just one kind or color, but wish to include all of them—the red as well as the purplish-blue and yellow fruit.

D. DUNCAN.

Perhaps the average housewife uses fresh plums to their best advantage and my grievance should be directed toward the restaurant and tearoom managers or menu planners. Almost all my meals last sumer and so far this season have been eaten in restaurants, and it is with great difficulty that I find a recognized fruit. And if you are a fresh plum pie addict as I have been ever since first tasting this delicious combination of tart fruit, sugar and crisp pastry, you will understand how difficult it is to go through a season of restaurant dining where plum pie is an unknown quantity.

But pie is not the only dessert to which fresh plums add a pleasing flavor. I was interested to find a week or two ago a plum refrigerator cake among the prize winners of one of the weekly Post contests. Just this fact made me consider that perhaps the housewife does know the merits of the fresh plum.

It is surprising, too, to find that there are really very few recipes for fresh plum dishes. Here are several that I have used and count among my favorite dishes.

Fresh Plum Pie.

One nine-inch pie shell will require at least two cups of washed, halved and stoned fresh plums. The plums may be red or blue or a combination of yellow and red, if preferred.

Before mixing the crust cover the stoned plums with three-fourths cup of granulated sugar and two tablespoons of quick-cooking tapioca. Stir sugar and tapioca through the plums. The tapioca is an ideal thickening agent for any fresh fruit pie, as it permits the juice to jell just enough to keep it from soaking into the crust, but it in no way detracts from the flavor or clear, bright color of the juice and fruit.

Fill the pie shell with fruit mixture and cover with top crust. Bake for ten minutes in a hot oven (450 degrees F.), then reduce heat to moderate (350 degrees F.) and continue baking for about 30 minutes or until pie is done.

Spiced Plums.

4 quarts plums
3 pounds sugar
1 tablespoon ground cinnamon
1 pint vinegar
1 tablespoon cloves
1 tablespoon allspice

Make a sirup from the vinegar, sugar and spices. Boil for five minutes. Prick each plum with a fork and pour the boiling sirup over the fruit. Let the whole stand three days, then skim out the plums, boil down the sirup until quite thick, add the plums and heat to boiling. Seal in clean, hot jars. These are delicious served with roast veal or fowl.

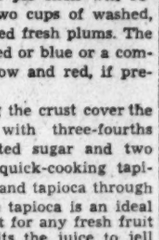
Be Sure of Your Etiquette

WHAT IS the etiquette of the pocketbook?

Embarrassing, flustered moments can develop when a girl doesn't know the right answer.



Let's suppose she meets a man she knows and as they walk along the street she stops to buy a newspaper or 10-cent magazine. He wishes to pay for it. Certainly, let him do so. It's just a small courtesy. Accept it graciously.

But by no means let him pay for a book, perfume, or hosiery. Not even if he's a close friend who sends gifts now and then. It's one thing to send a gift; another to be "shanghai-ed" on shopping tours! Postpone your shopping until you are alone.

Same way with street car and railroad fare. Let a man pay the nickel or dime in street car or bus. Do not let him buy a railroad ticket, but refuse his offer as graciously as you accept small courtesies.

Make a man feel he is a smooth, gentlemanly fellow. Give him a chance to open doors for you, place your chair at table, help you out of the automobile or street car.

Slips of etiquette rankle with most men. Everything's so much easier and more comfortable when you don't make any. Our 40-page booklet, "Etiquette for Every Day," will point out to you the little things you might forget. Good form in theaters, hotels, public places. Correct table manners.

Send 15c for our booklet, "Etiquette for Every Day," to The Washington Post, Home Institute, 109 West 19th street, New York, N. Y. Write plainly your name, address, and the Name of booklet.

WASHINGTON: SATURDAY, JULY 4, 1936

Milk Hearing Is Set July 20 On Price Pact

Agreement and Order for Handlers Would Cover D. C. Area.

Maryland-Virginia Unit of Producers Seeking Improved Market.

A public hearing on a proposed marketing agreement and order for handlers of milk in the Washington marketing area will be held July 20, it was announced yesterday by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration.

The agreement and order are designed to improve market conditions for farmers. It was developed at request of the Maryland and Virginia Milk Producers Association.

The agreement governs minimum prices which handlers would be required to pay producers for milk, the classification of milk bought by handlers and a method of paying producers uniform returns for their base milk and a uniform price for milk in excess of base.

Administration of the program would be through a market administrator, whose powers and duties are specified in the proposed agreement.

Under the agreement and order, handlers would be required to pay producers the following minimum prices:

Class 1 prices to associations of producers—Each handler would pay to any association of producers for Class 1 milk bought at the handler's plant from the association of producers not less than $3.08 per hundredweight subject to (a) the deduction of 35 cents per hundredweight if the handler's plant is located more than 35 miles from the nearest boundary of the marketing area, or if such milk is delivered to the handler's plant as cream and (b) the addition or deduction, as the case may be, of 6 cents per hundredweight for each 1-10 of 1 per cent above or below 4 per cent butterfat content of delivered milk.

Class 1 prices to producers—Each handler would pay producers not less than $2.80 per hundredweight subject to the deduction of 35 cents per hundredweight if the handler's plant is located more than 35 miles from the nearest boundary of the marketing area, or if this milk is delivered to the handler's plant as cream.

Class 2 prices to producers—Each handler would pay the amount received by the handler for the cream manufactured from this milk, or if sold as milk, the amount received for this milk, less 35 cents per hundredweight, as shown by sworn invoices filed with the market administrator; provided that the amount paid shall not be less than the equivalent of the standing offer of the Maryland-Virginia Producers Association to buy cream on file with the market administrator.

Inventor Is Freed In Death by Burns

Fort Lauderdale, Fla., July 3 (AP).—A jury acquitted P. E. Dettra today on charges of practicing medicine illegally in administering artificial heat treatments to Mrs. William J. O'Leary, of Chevy Chase, Md., who died here last May following a treatment. Mrs. O'Leary was the wife of an official in the Bureau of Public Roads in Washington.

Dettra, inventor of an artificial fever-producing machine, first was held on a temporary manslaughter charge after a coroner's jury found Mrs. O'Leary died from severe burns. That charge was dismissed.

Mrs. O'Leary received heat treatments from Dettra for arthritis.

District to Get $51,943 From Social Funds

U. S. Health Service to Distribute $8,881,859 Among States.

Parran Issues Statement of Allotments and Regulations.

The District of Columbia, during the fiscal year just started, will receive $51,943 as its share of an $8,881,859 fund the United States Public Health Service will distribute among the States and Territories under the social security act.

The service released a statement of its allocations, and with it a set of regulations from Dr. Thomas Parran, surgeon general of the United States. These instructions must be followed by the States and the District, if the quarterly allotments are to be forwarded.

The funds, Dr. Parran announced, are allotted on the basis of population, special health problems and financial needs. The "special health problems" may include training personnel and other problems "determiend" by the surgeon general.

The District's share, which is the total of the amounts allocated for the several divisions, was reached as follows: $20,182 on a basis of population (half of which is to be matched with existing District funds, and half with new money); $16,500 for application to special diseases and conditions (half to be matched by existing funds and half with new money); $5,261 for training of personnel, and $10,000 on a basis of financial needs.

Maryland will receive $125,433, divided as follows: $67,632 on the basis of population; $26,000 for special diseases and conditions; $21,692 for training personnel; and $10,109 on a basis of financial needs.

Virginia is scheduled for $214,972, of which $100,392 is earmarked on a basis of population; $19,000 for special diseases and conditions; $21,692 for training personnel, and $10,109 on a basis of financial needs.

Of the total amount, $8,000,000 is being distributed as the appropriation for the new fiscal year. The remaining $881,859 is the unexpended balance for the five months of the 1936 fiscal year, the period during which the Social Security act was operative.

New York will receive $659,620, the largest amount going to any one State. Delaware will get the smallest share, $31,024.

District Schedules Hearing on Zoning

The District Zoning Commission yesterday scheduled a public hearing for July 16 on three proposed amendments to the zoning code.

One of the proposed changes would be to extend from 10 to 15 days the time allowed for property owners to protect against construction of gasoline stations. This seeks to amend an amendment adopted earlier in the week to curb the building of filling stations.

The second amendment includes flats with apartment and tenement houses in the regulation relating to the size of lots required.

The last amendment seeks to make uniform the size of inclosed courts in two areas of the city where there is now a discrepancy.

Drop Shown In Car Deaths Last Month

8 Killed as Compared With 10 in June, '35; 378 Injured.

Van Duzer Encouraged Over Improvement; Lauds Caution.

A decrease in the number of traffic deaths and injuries during last month, as compared with June of 1935, was revealed yesterday by records at the Department of Vehicles and Traffic.

Although the number of accidents increased, fatalities dropped from 10 in 1935 to 8 last month. A total of 378 persons were injured last month, as compared with 426 in June of last year.

In 1935, 919 accidents were reported during the same month. This year, the number rose to 956. Instances of property damage also showed an upward trend. Damage was reported in 550 cases during June, 1935, and 610 cases last month.

Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer was encouraged over the improvement.

"Although more accidents were reported last month than during the same period a year ago, the personal injury record shows motorists are becoming more and more cautious—they are apparently reducing speeds and obeying regulations," said Van Duzer.

Farmer Is Killed.

An accident in Fairfax County, Va., cost the life of Philip Lee, 52, a farmer, of Chantilly, crushed beneath an overturned car near Chantilly. The machine in which Lee was riding rolled over twice after a collision with another car.

District Opens Piney Branch Road to Traffic

Three-Year Construction Program Ends With No Ceremony.

Piney Branch road, under construction for the past three years as a relief project and a new entrance to Rock Creek Park, was opened without ceremony yesterday afternoon, and immediately brought a great number of motorists over its length to test its availability as a short cut.

Workmen, in the absence of any dedication exercises, simply removed the barricades between Fourteenth and Sixteenth streets, thus making a new traffic artery into the park.

The new roadway is 4,000 feet long, and gives the park a new entrance under Sixteenth street, passing under old Tiger Bridge, just north of Spring road.

It is expected to relieve congestion on upper Sixteenth street, and provide a new traffic route from upper Fourteenth street to Beach drive.

About three years ago construction on the new road was started. It was wholly a relief project. After several interruptions it was taken over by the Works Progress Administration about a year ago.

4,470 Cabs Now in City, Keech Finds

Largest Number Ever Operating Here, Aid of P. U. C. Says.

There are 4,470 taxicabs on Washington's streets, the Public Utilities Commission disclosed yesterday during semiannual safety and sanitation inspection.

This is the largest number reached to date, Richmond B. Keech, acting chairman of the commission, said, although there has been little variation in recent years.

Keech said that he intends to renew a plea to Congress next January for passag of legislation authorizing the commission to reduce gradually the number of licensed cabs to 2,000. Such a bill was sent to Capitol Hill at the last session by the District Commissioners, but it died in the Senate and House District committees.

The plan would be to reduce the number of cabs only as rapidly as operators drop out voluntarily or as they prove themselves unfit to drive by recklessness or by violation of major traffic ordinances.

"This reduction would prove beneficial to the operators as well as to the public," Keech said.

"Not only would one of the major contributing factors to traffic congestion be alleviated, but the operators should be able to work shorter hours by adopting a three-shift working day while at the same time earning more money because of the lessened competition.

"It is my opinion that there would be no necessity for raising the present zone fares."

Under present laws the Public Utilities Commission has no authority to refuse to issue licenses to cab operators so long as their vehicles pass inspection tests.

Airlines Set Mark For Travel in May

A new monthly record of passengers carried and air miles flown was set during May by the scheduled airlines in this country, the Bureau of Air Commerce announced yesterday.

The 20 scheduled companies carried 96,368 passengers a total of 40,097,155 passenger miles during May. The highest previous passenger total was in August, 1935, when 89,581 travelers were carried 35,732,204 miles.

A new record for the percentage of available seats occupied also was set during May with 69 per cent. The previous record percentage was 62 last March.

Homicides and Humor Joined On Earle Bill

Carole Lombard as Swede; Strong Bill at Fox; Other Programs.

By Nelson B. Bell.

"THE PRINCESS COMES ACROSS." Paramount picturization of a novel by Louis Lucien Rouger, adapted by Phillip MacDonald, with screen play by Walter De Leon, Francis Martin, Frank Butler and Don Hartman, co-starring Carole Lombard and Fred MacMurray, with Alison Skipworth, William Frawley, Douglas Dumbrille, Porter Hall, George Barbier, Lumsden Hare, Sigmund Rumann, Mischa Auer, Tetsu Komai, Bradley Page and Bennie Bartlett. Directed by William K. Howard. Reviewed Friday morning.

Many elements contribute to the breezy entertainment afforded by this odd combination of comedy, romance and mystery-melodrama—and the greatest of these is comedy. The lines contrived for the pivotal characters by the considerable group of adapters, listed in the small-type paragraph above, come dangerously near being cleverly brittle a good deal of the time. When important characters in the action of the play begin to topple over dead from various causes, humor may be said to be sidetracked for the nonce, but, even so, there is a substantial groundwork of amusement in the mere fact that Carole Lombard, starred in the opus with Fred MacMurray, divides her time between a slightly biting caricature of Garbo and the authentic personification of slangy showgirl from deep Brooklyn.

BELL.

To clarify the matter, it will be necessary to make plain that the title of this gay little flippancy—if multiple murders may be construed as a source of gayety—is derived from the fact that a penniless trouper and her "stage mother" are aboard ship bound for America as the Princess Olga, of the royal house of Sweden, and her Lady-in-Waiting, for purposes of crashing the Hollywood studios. On shipboard they encounter a bizarre passenger list, including secret service men from England, Germany, France, Russsia and Japan, an American band leader and concertina player—that would be Mr. MacMurray—and a mysterious stranger who seems to be knocking the passengers off, one by one, when, as a matter of fact, it is not he who is doing it at all.

It all adds up to a desperate love affair between the "Princess" and King Mantell, the bandman, which culminates in the picture contract's going hang and Alison Skipworth's tag-line, as Lady Gertrude, that "no good ever came out of a concertina."

For Amusement Only.

Even with all its homicidal snuffing out of key figures in the action, "The Princess Comes Across" is one of those utterly inconsequential comedy-romances that serve no purpose whatever beyond the pleasure of the moment. It is fun while it lasts and as easily forgotten as the engagement you don't care to keep.

The most notable contribution to the effervescence of the occasion is Miss Lombard's assumption of a Garboesque dialect that is too pointed to be misinterpreted as anything but one star's willingness to have a little fun at the expense of another. Miss Lombard, however, has no monopoly on the picture's lighter facets. That veteran and robust comedienne Alison Skipworth is perfectly cast as the conniving warhorse of the theater, and Fred MacMurray and William Frawley combine their abilities as glib comedians to the eternal advantage of their vehicle. The mysterious angles of the story are lent substantial worth by the competent miming of Lumsden Hare, Sigmund Rumann, Douglas Dumbrille, Mischa Auer, Tetsu Komai, Porter Hall and Bradley Page. George Barbier is the ship's captain and Bennie Bartlett the bellhop.

William K. Howard's direction permits the ramifications of plot to become a little involved now and again, but background music and excellent photography take the mind off the deficiency in a thoroughly satisfactory manner.

A Varied Stage Bill.

The stage bill is headlined by Louise Massey and The Westerners, a group of five talented exponents of the songs of the plains, who scored a decisive hit at yesterday's first performance. "Gallop Your Troubles Away," "El Rancho Grande," "Pardner, It's the Parting of the Ways," a tricky arrangement of Percy Wenrich's "Put on Your Old Gray Bonnet" and "An Old Fashioned Song to a Young Sophisticated Lady" will afford an index to the sort of thing that threw yesterday's capacity house into a panic.

Also introduced by the sartorially magnificent Miss Audrey Sieber are Prosper and Marat, two male athletes who have solved all the problems of the law of leverages in their "Athletic Rhythm;" Steve Evans, the versatile young man who impersonates the luminaries of the screen world in "Hollywood Snapshots," adding Haile Selassie and Mussolini for good measure, and Harris, Claire and Shannon, two graceful young women and a man, assisted by Duke McHale, in a dance revue of more than ordinary intricacy and merit.

"The Song of a Nation," a Technicolor short subject dedicated to the creation of "The Star-Spangled Banner," is a noteworthy addition to the Fourth of July screen bill, with Donald Wood and Claire Dodd in the roles of Francis Scott Key and his wife.

A new issue of the Paramount News is the final auxiliary of a feature that will be enjoyed by all who find it possible to forget to think occasionally and surrender themselves to sheer frivolity—with unaccustomed mortuary trimmings.

Loew's Fox

"THE CRIME OF DR. FORBES." Twentieth Century-Fox picturization of an original story by Frances Hyland and Saul Elkins, featuring Robert Kent, J. Edward Bromberg, Gloria Stuart, Sara Haden, Henry Armetta, Alan Dinehart and Taylor Holmes. Directed by George Marshall. Reviewed Friday morning by Dorothea Lewis.

Here is a surprise picture—one of the few that arrive without ballyhoo and prove to be better than many so indiscriminately labeled as "terrific."

In fact, this might have been better than it is if it hadn't turned weak-kneed in the last few reels, much as "Fury" did, and failed to face the issue that it had itself raised.

In "The Crime of Dr. Forbes," the issue is that of mercy slaying, the question whether or not a doctor ever is justified in hastening the death of a hopelessly ill and suffering patient. Prompted, no doubt, by the outbreak of publicity on mercy killings of months ago, the picture is brave and honest and straightforward almost to the end, when it suddenly and disappointingly decides that it wasn't a mercy killing at all.

Dr. Godfrey, a famous scientist in medical research, puts young Michael Forbes through medical school on a scholarship and then takes him into his laboratory as an assistant. Forbes and Godfrey's wife see much of each other while Godfrey is away on a research expedition, and suddenly realize that they are in love. They have just said "good-by" to each other, when word reaches them of an accident to Godfrey. Fatally injured, but dying slowly in terrible agony, Godfrey begs Forbes and others to give him an overdose of opiates to hasten his death.

Story Told Vigorously.

It isn't pleasant but it is vigorously, movingly told and even with that last minute welching it is intensely interesting, quite new in handling and excellently played, with a particularly fine performance by Robert Kent.

His face is familiar, we've probably seen him in small parts without noticing. From now on we shall notice, for here he steps forward in the role of the sensitive and tortured young Dr. Forbes and gives a splendid account of himself. He is a handsome young man and we do hope the matinee idolators won't jump on him as they have on Robert Taylor and put his evident talent into romantic fa-de-las. As it is, he doesn't even put his arms around the girl.

It is pleasant to see J. Edward Bromberg again, though his role as Godfrey does not begin to tap his resources. This fine actor is one of the most important members of the Group Theater of New York, and played for them the famous role of Dr. Hochberg in "Men in White." Sara Haden, Gloria Stuart, Taylor Holmes and Henry Armetta help. Armetta is quite touching in several of his little scenes.

The picture takes straight from the shoulder wallops at the American talent for turning tragedy into a side show. It is far from being grim throughout. There are many pleasant moments and even its comedy touches are handled with a certain freshness. It's too bad it couldn't go through with what it started—possibly not solving the problem, but certainly not denying it.

The Ozzie Nelsons Score.

On the stage there is a feast for Ozzie Nelson-Harriet Hilliard fans, and who isn't? The packed house at the first show yesterday was rightly enthusiastic.

Young Mr. Nelson, looking cool in white, swings his orchestra through hot music and sweet, and sings and talks and is pleasantly present throughout. The lovely Harriet, quite dazzling in black, sings her two hit numbers from "Follow the Fleet," scoring particularly in "Here Am I." Her voice is sweet and haunting and she and Ozzie have considerable fun together in other numbers. As the only other soloist, Ozzie presents one of the wildest women seen in many moons. Her contortions didn't particularly please us but her abandon is wholehearted and her truckin' swell. The orchestra is—well you know how good it is, or should.

An amusing Patsy Kelly comedy, a little sobering because of the presence of the late Thelma Todd in it, the newsreel and Phil Lampkin's "Memories of France" overture complete an excellent holiday bill.

RKO-Keith's

"THE BRIDE WALKS OUT." RKO-Radio picturization of a story by Howard Emmett Rogers, with screen play by P. J. Wolfson and Philip G. Epstein, featuring Barbara Stanwyck, Gene Raymond and Robert Young, supported by Helen Broderick, Ned Sparks, Billy Gilbert and Hattie McDaniels. Directed by Leigh Jason. Reviewed Friday afternoon by W. A. Whitney.

Patterned in tempo and lightness of performance after the earlier and entirely satisfying "Love on a Bet," "The Bride Walks Out" offers another sprightly comedy-drama, short in monumental histrionics, but long in laughs and pleasing portrayals. In brief, this is grand entertainment for any season and especially on a sultry summer's afternoon.

Essentially, this is the story of a $50-a-week modeler of ritzy clothes marrying a $35-a-week coming engineer, thereby becoming nursemaid to three rooms and a canary. Bills start to mount up and, to square things, she resumes her earlier employment much to the ire of hubby. A squabble ensues, and before he can, the bride walks out. But, with the aid of a million-heir, it all works out quite in the usual way.

The screen's fair-haired lad, Gene Raymond, here repeats his good work as "Love on a Bet," and comes through with another entertaining performance, as the husband. As the wife, Barbara Stanwyck gets an other chance to emote, if somewhat less hysterically than has been her wont, in much the same manner as has made her perhaps the screen's most explosively temperamental artiste.

Picture Has Dry Humor.

Robert Young, the old—or, rather, young—smoothie, is just that again—and if there is any one better able than he to portray a playboy on Fifth Avenue high-hat, periodically, if not perennially, inebriated, then we have not yet seen him.

Embellishing the drama with dry but hard-hitting humor are Ned Sparks and Helen Broderick, with the verbal hay-makers of the one being equalled or bettered by the oral right and left hooks of the other. And the pertinent observations of Hattie McDaniels, as the colored maid, are by no means the least of the picture's good points.

As might be judged from these cursory remarks, "The Bride Walks Out" is sheer entertainment, and purveyed for no other purpose than to amuse. Satisfactory, from a technical standpoint, to the eye and highly diverting to the ear, the picture offers ample reason to be considered seriously by diversion-seekers.

Augmenting the feature is a release of the Screen Snapshots, wherein the galaxy of Cinemaland is observed at the Santa Anita race track, where an exciting battle of the bangtails is run. "Bold King Cole," a Technicolor cartoon, with Felix the Cat, fighting to a finish, with the aid of lightning, the ghosts of the king's ancestors, is amusing. An issue of the Pathe News rounds out a delightful holiday program.

This Is the Fourth of July!

Whenever Independence Day rolls around, the motion picture studios may be relied upon to provide a considerable array of seasonable patriotic "still" photographs. The one reproduced above seems to be the least dizzy of the current year's crop, and so we give it to you as a reminder of the patriotic implications of the day. It was posed by Eleanore Whitney, the diminutive, high-speed tap dancer on the Paramount lot in Hollywood, who here, of course, is demonstrating what Molly Pitcher may, or may not, have looked like. Anyway, it's a nice picture.

Columbia

"FURY." Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picturization of a story by Norman Krasna, adapted to the screen by Bartlett Cormack and Fritz Lang, faturing Spencer Tracy and Sylvia Sydney, with Walter Abel, Bruce Cabot, Edward Ellis, Walter Brennan, Frank Albertson, George Walcott, Arthur Stone, Morgan Wallace, Edwin Maxwell, Howard Hickman, Jonathan Hale, Leila Bennett, Esther Dale and Helen Flip. Directed by Fritz Lang.

Hewing as close to the line of dramatic integrity and logic as so bitter and impassioned a subject will permit, this stirring film play amply justifies its return to F street, after a fortnight at the Palace, to serve as the new week's chief screen feature at the Columbia.

There have been suggestions that this subject falls short of the courage of its initial convictions in not permitting a living "dead man" to wreak a brutal vengeance upon 22 defendants on trial for a crime they meant to commit, but didn't. Morally guilty of frenzied recourse to lynch law and murder, these 22, nevertheless, did not kill their man. Had he, working in secret and supposedly dead, sent them to the gallows, he would have been guilty of a crime far greater than theirs.

These considerations, however, are apart from the fact that "Fury," with all its vigorous attack on mob rule, primarily is a tense, gripping and deeply impressive bit of screen entertainment. Its situations are taut, its psychology sound and its cast such as to lend added effectiveness to the story conceived by Norman Krasna and directed by Fritz Lang as his first contribution to the American cinema.

Spencer Tracy and Sylvia Sidney, in the pivotal roles of the young couple whose marriage is deferred by the sudden outbreak of mob hysteria, give splendid accounts of themselves. They are supported by a cast of careful selection and conspicuous ability. Edward Ellis, Walter Abel, Bruce Cabot and Frank Albertson are among the foremost of the players who give the play point and force in support of the stars.

The usual array of short sound subjects and a new issue of the newsreel round out the program for this repeat engagement.

Metropolitan

"HEARTS DIVIDED." Warner Brothers-Cosmopolitan Pictures filmization of Rida Johnson Young's story, "The Glorious Betsy," adapted to the screen by Laird Doyle and Casey Robinson, starring Marion Davies, supported by Dick Powell, Charles Ruggles, Arthur Greacher, Edward Everett Horton, Claude Raines, Henry Stephenson, Clara Blandick, George Irving and Phillip Hurlic. Directed by Frank Borzage. Reviewed Friday night (repeat engagement) by Sally Stroud.

The "Hearts Divided" are reunited in the new ending added since the Davies picture was shown last week. And now everyone should be happy, specifically the Jerome Bonaparte heirs residing hereabouts. The discarded ending had Betsy Patterson, Jerome's fiancee, gallantly giving him up for the greater glory of France.

In the new version, she is still unselfish; she still returns heartbroken to Baltimore, but Jerome comes singin' down the lane, and they smile through tears as they plan to be simply Mr. and Mrs. Jerome.

Were it not for a most capable actress in the new ending, this change might have a tinge of fake anticlimax. This charming woman (Beulah Bondi), playing the mother of Napoleon and Jerome, with a minimum of verbiage, with perfect reasonableness, arranges events to lead up to the happy ending. Says she to Napoleon: "Maybe he (Jerome) doesn't want to be a great man like you . . ." So all the bitterness resulting from Napoleon's attempts to coerce Jerome into marrying the Princess of Wurtenburg for reasons of state, dissolves. And back to Baltimore, to Betsy Patterson, of the Baltimore Pattersons, goes blithe young Jerome.

They would be the same Pattersons who viewed him with disdain when, posing as Betsy's French tutor, he absorbed much of her time. Sent to America by Napoleon as a good-will emissary, pleasure-loving Jerome chaffed at banquets and serious talk about the Louisiana Purchase, then pending. Being intrigued by the piquant charm of Betsy, he accepted a post as her tutor, posing as Mr. Jerome.

Cast and Supplementaries.

Sweetly gay, Miss Davies wears gorgeous gowns, and has never been photographed better. Her best scene is the one where she argues with Napoleon about whether she or France shall have Jerome.

It is this Napoleon (Claude Rains) who is the plum in the puddin'; wearing pointed bangs, high collars and the accoutrements of the little big man, he makes him seem vivid and real.

"Rhythm Party," presided over by Dr. Sigmund Spaeth, introduces a new musical game. Caperton and Columbus deliver some effective dancing.

Rufe Davis, country boy de luxe, gives a good performance as an animal imitator. "City Slicker" also has a good chorus tap routine, "Miss Priscialla Went to Town."

Newsreel shots: Great Lakes Exposition opens, Zioncheck goes home, giant railway mortars tried-out by field artillery, Admiral Reeves bids farewell to fleet, Tom Howard opens yachting season and Comptroller McCarl, no-man of the Nation, makes some very pertinent and challenging statements, to climax the end of his term.

Palace

"PRIVATE NUMBER." Twentieth-Century-Fox picturization of a play by Cleves Kinkead, adapted to the screen by Gene Markey and William Counselman, starring Robert Taylor and Loretta Young, supported by Basil Rathbone, Marjorie Gateson and Patsy Kelly. Directed by Roy Del Ruth. Reviewed second week by Dorothea Lewis.

This can only be blamed on a late spring and Robert Taylor.

The story is older than the hills—the servant girl who marries the rich young man and is cast out by his stern parents and suffers until the inevitable happy ending.

Yet crowds fight their way to see it—or rather to see Mr. Taylor—and it stays for a second week. Personally, we think it's too bad. Mr. Taylor's a nice young actor, for all his good looks, and deserves a better future than kissing the girl through endless reels for ardent fans who looooove romance. We imagine he could act, even with his hair rumpled and old clothes on, if the ladies would let him. But if his smiles in an antiquated story bring in dollars, he will continue to smile until the next new smiler comes along.

Loretta Young is the servant girl and the reason for the men in the audience. Basil Rathbone is very bad as the butler-menace and Patsy Kelly is present with all her raucous comedy.

There is a distinctly happy note, however, in "Three Little Wolves," Disney's newest delight.

RCA Factory Closed To Prevent Violence

Camden, N. J., July 3 (U.P.).—The Radio Corporation of America forestalled possible violence today by suddenly closing its plant here, sending 5,000 workers out to join union members who have been on strike for more than a fortnight.

The action followed a request by Camden city commissioners that the plant be closed, since they believed "the situation to be serious." It followed also announcement that 2,200 union employes of the New York shipyards here had voted to support the R. C. A. strike "morally and financially."

The employes were sent home just before noon, with a full day's pay and the word that the plant would not reopen "until Monday morning." There was only a handful of pickets near the plant when the 5,000 employes who have ignored the strike came out, and there was no disorder.

By Betty Read.

Dith the President's recent signature on some legislation of benefit to Government employes, the list of what the Seventy-fourth Congress did for them lengthens a bit.

Eight separate measures to protect the interests of Government empolyes or improve their working conditions can be chalked up to this Congress which so hectically adjourned a short time ago.

Although agitation for the restoration of pay cuts was begun in the Seventy-third Congress, it was finally restored in the early days of the Seventy-fourth and the annual leave which had been taken away in the interest of economy was likewise returned.

Government workers as a whole consider these the most important things done for them within the past legislative term.

They wanted an optional 30 year retirement plan but that was passed up by Congress and in its place Congress protected the retirement fund by making larger appropriations to support it which greatly strengthened the fund's position.

G-Men Win Retirement.

The G-Men were put under retirement for the first time and Congress adopted a retirement bill for the employes of the Government-owned Alaskan Railroad.

Perhaps one of the most important tangles Congress straightened out this session was when it untied the working knots in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. The 40-hour bill for all employes of the bureau brought unified working conditions instead of having a few under the 40-hour regulation and the others on a 44-hour schedule.

The pay loss for mail equipment shop employes who were put on the five day week without protection of their wage-scale was taken care of in a special bill that worked for the benefit of a local group while the passage of the Walsh-Healey bill setting up working standards for private employers who take Government contracts was hailed as one of the outstanding achievements by Government workers. This bill protected the standards of a large number of employes in arsenals, navy yards and other manufacturing plants of the Government by making private manufacturers maintain the same working conditions as those of the Government.

Hunt "Perfect Wife."

Here it is at last! We have waited impatiently to know just the recipe for the qualifications of a perfect wife—a contest that the lovelorn editor of the Resettlement Press has been waging furiously for the past month. The lads and lassies—mostly lads, we might add—of the Resettlement Administration have been sending their opinions on the subject to "Countess Senrab," the editor who settles the weighty problems of love in the monthly news sheet of the Administration workers.

First qualification for a man's ideal is "personality" or, as the Resettlement Press contestants so graciously concede, "a perfect wife should have that undeniable something — personality — that innate ability to make friends and hold them."

Third; get-along-ableness which "eliminates that bugbear, fussing and nagging."

Fourth; efficiency or "being at the right place at the correct time and doing the proper thing in the best possible manner."

Fifth and final; attractiveness or "a face and form, maintained by personal daintiness, such as will make her always a joy to behold."

And just for good measure a postscript to the recipe is added "a wife, in general, that will always keep a man alert to rivalry and presenting his best side."

Well, all we can say, is that the lassies have the next inning for the July contest is to pick the qualifications for a perfect husband.

Elliott Has New Rule.

The office of the Comptroller General has a new head now that John Raymond McCarl, the first Comptroller General has completed his term. In the time before a new Comptroller is appointed—and Senator Pat Harrison, of Mississippi, and Morris Tremaine, Comptroller of New York State, are among those mentioned for the job— the work is being handled by Richard N. Elliott, who has been a deputy comptroller.

Elliott is well known in Governmental circles of the town, for he served as a Representative from Indiana from 1917 to 1931, when he took on his present job. He's a wizard on statistics, but they say that doesn't apply when he tells tales of the fish he caught and the big ones that got away. He's an ardent fisherman and until he had to assume McCarl's job he used to get away with his rod and reel almost every week-end.

The United States Coast Guard announces that it is now accepting applications for enlistment from young men between the ages of 18 and 25 at the recruiting station, 1300 E street. Richard H. Bartlett, chief quartermaster, is the officer in charge.

Ends 45-Year Service.

Maggie V. Riley, a record and schedule clerk in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, just completed 45 years of service for the Government, and last month gathered up her personal possessions around the office she has occupied so long, and took them home to stay. Along with eight others in the bureau, she was retired at the end of the month. Her next nearest rival in length of service was Mary A. Mulcahy, a time and personnel clerk who had served 38 years for Uncle Sam. Then came Joseph N. Lawson, a hydraulic presser, whose term of service was 33 years; Leonard Olree, with 30 years; Garnette L. Clay, Martha J. Thomas and Charles M. Stewart, each with 26, and Mrs. Anna J. Petty and Clifford C. Turner, with 16 years apiece.

She is generally in the mood of the scene she is playing that day.

Gregory Ratoff: He is full of energy, always on the go. On the set, he is working on several deals as well as the picture. When he isn't in a scene he will rush to the front office to tell of a story he has for a picture. Or he'll be in a business conference in his dressing room. Ratoff generally has a yarn to tell and is always entertaining on the set. He ad libs lines and is improving pieces of business. The other afternoon playing a scene, the director said: "Ratoff, that was very good, but keep your hand out of Patsy Kelly's face. We want to see it."

Curious Coincidence: Charlie Hand, Jimmy Walker's ex-secretary, and Joe Keenan are London-bound on the same boat to see the ex-mayor . . . Norma Taylor and Evelyn Crowell, ex-wives of Bill Duryea, squabbled over him at the Greenwich Village Inn a few hours back . . . With Michael Farmer and Mrs. Tommy Manville as peacemakers . . . Scudder Middleton, one of the editors of Stage, and Elizabeth Dewing, Tallulah Bankhead's understudy, are feverish . . . Horace ("Three Men on a Horse") MacMahon and Pauline Quaile are breathless . . . Furious Forties Fisticuffs: Mills, of Mills, Kirk and Martin, punching it out with another guy on West Forty-sixth street, his new white coat a scarlet ruin . . . A. L. Fierst takes over the Carlyle Publishing House . . . Elaine Temple, the actress, is now Mrs. Brad Hatton . . . "The Glory of Love" has spurted to No. 1 position among songs . . . I liked it even when it was "Whoopee."

Has anyone pointed out that Clark Gable and Spencer Tracy, who play the leads in "San Francisco," both won their chance in flickers through the stage character of Killer Mears in Herman Shumlin's "Last Mile?" . . . Wall Street predicts that the market will hop now that both of the political conventions are out of the way . . . Uh-huh, and every time it's supposed to hop, you see people hopping out of skyscrapers with ticker tape for parachutes . . . The George Marshalls (Corinne Griffith) honeymooning at Murray Bay, Quebec, must have chuckled when they received Willie Moore's wire: "Dear George: That is an awful trick to play on a nice girl like Corinne" . . . Mrs. Marvin Schenck, the $1 race track plunger, picked three long shots yesterday and raided the books for $24.

Arthur Willi, Oscar Serlin, Joe Pincus and other talent scouts might inspect Marjorie Robbins, the girl in the Robbins family act . . . She's a bit of femme charm, and a great hoofer . . . Big Tim Sullivan's daughter is trying to land a spot with the Federal Theater project through the relief bureau . . . Certainly the friends of her dad, noted for his philanthropies, can cut the red tape in this instance.

Newest wrinkle on the Stem is an outfit that is circularizing clubs and organizations, offering Aryan orchestras, entertainers and serenaders . . . One of the first letters they sent out was addressed to the Nordacs Clubs, composed of Jewish members . . . I suppose an Aryan band would play the melodies of Irving Berlin, Gordon and Revel, Lew Brown, Irving Caesar, etc., who are non-Aryan . . . I suggest that these dopes and Secretary Marcia Martin act their ages in swing tempo . . . Tin Pan Alley has room only for harmony.

30,000 to See Double Clash of Nats and Yankee Sluggers Today

Perry Takes 3d Net Crown; Von Cramm, Hurt, Plays On Stands Unaware Ace Is Injured on 1st Serve Until Finish.

German Crushed By 6–1, 6–1, 6–0

Rest, Treatment Are Refused; Perry 2d to Win 3 in Row.

By the Associated Press.

Wimbledon, England, July 3—Baron Gottfried Von Cramm pulled a groin muscle out of place on his first serve and thereafter offered only feeble opposition today as Fred Perry won his third straight all-England tennis championship.

After a heroic opening game, which went to deuce nine times before Perry held service, a capacity crowd of 18,000 sat in mounting mystification as the champion rode rough-shod over the usually brilliant and acrobatic baron.

Not until Perry had crushed Von Cramm at love in the final set, completing a 6—1, 6—1, 6—0 victory, did the blond-haired Teuton permit the referee to make a dramatic announcement of his injury. Then he walked off the court dejectedly.

Baron Refuses Delay.

It was apparent to everybody that there was something wrong with the baron after the sensational first game. It offered the tip-off as to what sort of a match it might have been except for the mishap.

Perry, knowing of Von Cramm's injury, offered to let him rest and get a message, but the German, realizing that would be a breach of Wimbledon tradition, declined and courageously stuck it out to the bitter end.

By his victory, Perry became the first player to win three Wimbledon singles titles in succession since Tony Wilding finished a string of four in 1913 before losing his life in the war.

From a strictly competitive standpoint, all of the action in the breezy match was packed in the first game. It was a beautiful base line duel with both players lathering the ball for all they were worth. Perry finally held his serve at 13-11 and then Von Cramm won the second behind his twisting, high-bounding delivery at 4—2.

U. S. Pair Loses.

Following the Perry-Von Cramm match, final brackets were filled in the men's and women's doubles. Britain's Davis Cup pair, Pat Hughes and Charles Tuckey, gained one-half of the doubles final with 7—5, 6—4, 3—6, 11—9 victory over the American champions, Wilmer Allison and Johnny Van Ryn. The Americans were helpless in the first two sets, but co-ordinated beautifully in the next two. Games followed service in the fourth until the Britons broke through Van Ryn.

The other doubles finalists will be another British combination, Charles Hare and Fred Wilde. They vanquished the French team, Jean Borotra and Jacques Brugnon, 6—1, 4—6, 6—1, 6—4. Borotra, injured yesterday and apparently through with competition for a while, confounded critics by reporting for the match. As it turned out, however,

Huskies Reign Crew Race Favorites

Coaches, However, Look for Wide Open Competition.

By the United Press.

Princeton, N. J., July 3.—With the world's rowing supremacy as their goal, six of the Nation's fastest eight-oared shells completed training today on the calm waters of Lake Carnegie for the trial Olympic tryouts tomorrow and Sunday.

Since the 2,000-meter race for eight-oared shells was added to the Olympic program in 1920 the United States has monopolized the event. Navy triumphed at Antwerp in 1920. Yale won at Paris in 1924 and California ruled the waves at Amsterdam in 1928 and at Los Angeles in 1932.

So the crew which survives the three 2,000-meter tests tomorrow and Sunday will be favored to give the United States its fifth straight eight-oared shell rowing championship at Berlin. The distance is 13 yards short of 1¼ miles.

Wide Open Race.

Although Washington's unbeaten crew is currently favored to win the Berlin trip, coaches and other rowing critics regard the race as a wide open battle with at least four of the six boats having a chance to paddle home in front.

The complete field includes Washington, intercollegiate champion at four miles; California, second at Poughkeepsie; Pennsylvania, early pace-maker at Poughkeepsie; Princeton, dangerous at the short distance, and New York Athletic Club, a crew of nondescripts composed of only one man with college rowing experience.

The trials will open with two heats Saturday, the first at 6:30 p. m. (Eastern daylight time) and the second at 7 p. m. (Eastern daylight time). The lanes for the heats follow:

First heat—Lane 2, Princeton; lane 3, Washington; lane 4, New York A. C.

Second heat—Lane 2, California; lane 3, Navy; lane 4, Pennsylvania.

The first two boats in each heat will meet in the final Sunday, starting at 5 p. m. (Eastern daylight time).

The feeling in most quarters is that Washington, Princeton, California and Navy will survive the heats and meet in the final.

G. B. Shaw Admits He's a Boxing Fan

Irish Author Sees Movies of Schmeling Fight.

By the United Press.

London, July 3.—George Bernard Shaw, Irish author and critic, was revealed to be a boxing fan tonight when he attended the showing of the Max Schmeling-Joe Louis fight pictures here.

"At the ringside I dislike crowds and the noise they make, but I always enjoy good boxing," he told a tabloid reporter, adding, "And that has nothing to do with the Irish in me. Good clean fighting is worth anybody's time."

Accolade Betters Mass. Track Mark

By the Associated Press.

Suffolk Downs, Mass., July 3.—Donald Christmas' Accolade shattered this track's record for the mile and 70 yards to win the Quincy Handicap, feature race here today.

Accolade's time—1:41:1 for the distance—was a scant three-fifths short of the world's record.

He charged home a half-length ahead of Roustabout, from the stable of C. V. Whitney.

Third was B. N. Kane's Go Quick. Accolade paid $6.60 to win, Roustabout $3.80 to place and Go Quick $2.80 to show.

This Morning . . .

With Shirley Povich.

Mr. Ford Frick, the reformed sports writer who is now manufacturing news as the president of the National League, reassures the supporters of his league that the National "is difinitely out to win this year's all-star game." Well, that clears up a lot of the mystery about those goings-on in the three previous all-star games in which the National League took a terrific shellacking from the American Leaguers.

POVICH.

It is clear now that the National League may have been out to win those three games in 1933, '34 and '35, but not "definitely," which apparently was a great mistake. It has taken the National Leaguers three long years of the Roosevelt Administration to decide upon a definiteness of purpose in these all-star engagements.

However that may be, it certainly behooves the National League to get not only definite about these all-star affairs, but downright serious. Three successive lickings by the American Leaguers in addition to the collapse of the National League entry in the 1935 world series, constitute an awful sock to National League prestige.

If you don't think those beatings hurt, take a gander at the National League chiefs after one of their lickings in the all-star game. Last year at Cleveland, President Frick and the National League club owners at the game with lengthened faces and drooping chins, would have been grateful had the earth opened and swallowed 'em up while the American Leaguers were celebrating their victory. The jealousy between the two leagues is no myth. The big shots of the two circuits are in eternal fear that their league will lose prestige, especially in the cities which boast clubs in both circuits, with the resultant competition for patronage.

The composite box score of the three all-star games played thus far speaks eloquently of the superiority of the American Leaguers over the National. Contained in the figures is a shocking story of the futility of the National League on the days that were set aside for the test of the all-star talent in both major circuits.

In winning all three games the American Leaguers have amassed 17 runs compared to 10 by the National. Against the best pitching the National was able to muster over three years the American Leaguers were able to compile a respectable team batting average of .304, compared to the anemic .198 batting figure of the National League, which likewise drew its talent from the best sluggers in the circuit.

The American League's lone sour notes of the all-star games were its futility of the league's sluggers against Carl Hubbell in that 1934 game at the Polo Grounds and the abject failure of their bright star, Lou Gehrig, to distinguish himself in any of the games.

Hubbell it was who provided the greatest individual feat of all-star game history with his superperfect pitching during a single stretch in the 1934 game. That was the occasion when the screw-ball ace of the Giants met up with Babe Ruth, Lou Gehrig, Jimmy Foxx, Al Simmons and Joe Cronin, the greatest batting talent the American League could bring to bear, and struck 'em all out—consecutively.

Gehrig, perhaps the greatest of all first basemen, and now the American League's batting leader, has been the undisputed No. 1 flop of the all-star engagements. Playing in all the games, Gehrig has failed to make a hit. Not only that, but he had been guilty of the only two errors that marred a perfect fielding average by the American Leaguers.

In Short—

Paradoxically, Al Simmons, the American League's greatest performer in the all-star frays, was omitted from the team this year . . . Simmons, with his .462 batting average, holds 11 all-star records exclusively and shares in 8 others . . . Frankie Frisch personally scored four of the ten runs the National League was able to accumulate in three years . . . Curiously, neither team has been able to score a run in the seventh, eighth or ninth innings . . . The only home run hitters of the series have been Jimmy Foxx, Babe Ruth, Ducky Medwick and Frankie Frisch, who hit two . . . Ben Chapman has been the only outfielder during the series to throw out a base runner . . . Lefty Gomez has been the workhorse among the all-star pitchers, hurling 12 innings during the three games . . . Dizzy Dean has allowed six hits during the four innings he has been on the mound . . . Four American Leaguers, Ben Chapman, Lou Gehrig, Charley Gehringer and Lefty Gomez, have been named on every all-star team . . . the only National Leaguers who have been chosen in every year are Wally Berger, Gabby Hartnett and Carl Hubbell.

Chicago Beats Cleveland By 6 to 5

Defeat for Tribe Boosts Red Sox Into Tie for Fourth Place.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, July 3.—The White Sox obligingly nosed out the Cleveland Indians 6 to 5 today to pull the Boston Red Sox back into the American League first division.

Rookie Italo Chelini, making his second start for the Sox since he was brought in from Keokuk of the Western League about two weeks ago, made the Indians his second-straight victims. Although touched for ten hits, he was effective in all but the fifth inning, when the Tribe put together five hits for all the Cleveland runs.

The Sox, meantime, pecked away at George Blaeholder and Oral Hildebrand, who relieved him in the sixth, to come from behind and win by scoring in every inning from the fourth to the eighth.

Luke Appling, with a homer and two singles, driving in three runs, paced the attack.

The Sox opened the scoring in the fourth when Appling's single sent Mule Haas, who had walked, across the plate. In the fifth, the Sox scored twice more on Chelini's single, Rip Radcliff's two-bagger and Mike Kreevich's grounder to shortstop.

Appling's homer came in the sixth, followed in the seventh with a run on hits by Kreevich and Appling, and in the eighth with another tally when Jimmy Dykes walked and was brought home by Radcliff's third hit of the day.

Joe Louis Tells Radio Audience How He Lost

New York, July 3 (U.P.).—Joe Louis stumbled through his prepared script here tonight to tell a Nation-wide radio audience how he happened to be knocked out two weeks ago by Max Schmeling, of Germany.

"It was the old story," he told Frank Fay, his interviewer. "He let go that right, and I forgot to duck."

Louis also said he lost the fight in the second round instead of the fourth, when he was floored. "Do your remember the punch?" he was asked.

"I'll never forget it."

Louis said he had no alibis, and that the best man won that night. He was received enthusiastically b ythe audience of several hundred ip the broadcasting station.

100 Women Seek Olympic Places

By the Associated Press.

Providence, R. I., July 3.—More than 100 of the Nation's greatest women track athletes were here tonight ready for the final Olympic tryouts and national championships tomorrow.

To the winners of the first three places in each of the Olympic events will come a place on the United States Olympic team.

The games will be held in Brown University Stadium, under the auspices of the Providence Tercentenary committee. Heats for the 100-meter dash will occupy the morning, and the actual titular competition will start at 12:30 p. m. (Eastern standard time).

Chief interest will center in the performances in the 100-meter dash of Miss Helen Stephens, Fulton, Mo., flash, who is being hailed by Midwest track followers as another Babe Didrickson, and of Miss Betty Robinson, Chicago's Olympic dash winner in 1928, who is essaying a comeback campaign after being severely injured in an airplane crash in 1931.

10,000 Meters Race Won By Lash

Hoosier Star Hangs Up New American Six Mile Record.

Qualifies for Position on Olympic Team, Pentti Second.

By the United Press.

Palmer Stadium, Princeton, N. J., July 3.—Donald Lash, sandy-haired distance ace from the University of Indiana, became the first 1936 National A. A. U. champion tonight when he won the 10,000-meter run, preliminary event to the remainder of the senior championships, which will be contested here tomorrow.

In winning, the tireless Lash qualified for a place on Uncle Sam's Olympic team along with Eino Pentti, of the Millrose A. A., and Stanley Wudyka, of Philadelphia, who finished second and third, respectively.

Lash was timed in 31 minutes 6.9 seconds for the 6 miles 376 yards, a new American record. The former mark of 31:24 was set by Thomas F. McDonough in 1932. His time also bettered the senior championship mark of 31:28.4, set by Joey Ray in 1928. The Indiana star failed by more than a minute, however, to better the world record of 30:0.2, which Paavo Nurmi set in 1924.

Lash's Times.

Lash's times: 1 mile, 4:43.8; 2 miles, 9:37.2; 3 miles, 14:41.8; 4 miles, 19:50.6.

The junior A. A. U. title, which was run in conjunction with the senior event, was won by A. A. Zamparelli, Northeastern University, who set a junior record of 33 minutes 11 seconds, compared to the former mark of 33:18.8 set by Thomas McDonough. William Smith, Germantown, Pa., was second and Jean Bethelot, New York, third.

That was the seventh junior mark of the day. Earlier new records had been set in the 3,000-meter walk, the 110-meter hurdles, discus throw, 400-meter hurdles and 200 and 800-meter runs.

Irving Horowitz, of New York, turned in the greatest record assault by winning the walking title in 14 minutes 1.4 seconds, compared to the former mark of 14:51.9 set by Harold Nylund, of New York.

Dan Caldemeyer, University of Indiana flyer, won the 110-meter hurdles in 14.5 seconds, shaving three-tenths of a second from the record set by Al Moreau, of L. S. U. in 1933.

Shore Record.

Two men shared the 200-meter record — Robert Rodenkirchen, of New York, and Bob Graham, Whitman College, Washington. Each won their trial heats in 21.2 seconds, compared to the former mark of 21.6 set in 1933 by James Johnson, Perrin Walker, of Georgia Tech, Illinois State Normal College. L. also bettered the former mark as he won the third heat in 21.4. Rodenkirchen won the finals in 21.2, with Graham second.

Joe Patterson, of Navy, won a trial heat in the 400-meter hurdles in 53 seconds, compared to the former mark of 53.7 held by Estel Johnson, of the San Francisco Olympic Club. Patterson later won the finals in 53.2.

Hugh Cannon, of Brigham Young University, Utah, hurled the discus 157 feet 2½ inches to better the old record of 153 feet 6 inches held by Chester Cruikshank, of the Denver A. C.

Marmaduke Hobbs, of the University of Indiana, created another

Olympic Rowing Pair Is Chosen

4 Champions Decided in Schuylkill Regatta.

Philadelphia, July 3.—Four national rowing championships and one Olympic representative were chosen today in a Schuylkill River regatta which was devoid of thrills or remarkable performances.

The Olympic tryout winner was the Penn Athletic Club crew in the pair-oared shells with coxswains race. The Quakers, composed of Tom Curran and Joe Dougherty and steered by George Loveless, outdistanced two city rivals—the Pennsylvania Barge Club and Undine Barge—and won in 8 minutes 36 2-5 seconds.

National champions decided today were:

145-pound association single sculls—Joseph Ansyal, Ravenswood Boat Club, Long Island, N. Y.

145-pound four-oared shells with coxswain—Undine Barge Club (William Malcomson, Wesley Gerhab, Edwin Hixon, George Hood and James Gillian, coxswain).

Quadruple sculls—Bachelors Barge Club, Philadelphia, stroked by Tom Pierie.

145-pound quadruple sculls—Malta Boat Club, stroked by Robert A. Wilson.

Ten more national champions in addition to five Olympic tryout winners will be decided tomorrow. Chief interest tonight appeared to be centered on the four-oared shells with coxswains and the singles sculls.

Newsom, Cascarella Given Hurling Tasks; City Interest at Peak

Joe DiMaggio to Make Local Debut in Twin Bill; Gomez and Broaca Pitch for Leaders Against Home-Coming Nats.

By Shirley Povich.
Sports Editor of The Post.

The Yanks are coming, and the arrangements for their reception at Griffith Stadium in the holiday double-header today could be no more attractive if it were a deep-hatched plot of the baseball fates conspiring to present Washington with its peak day of the 1936 season.

The invasion of the league leaders and their new Murdereds' Row finds Washington baseball interest whipped to a fever pitch by the recent successes of the Nats. Capital fans to the number of 30,000 are expected to acclaim the return of the Nats to Griffith Stadium after their 11 victories in 16 games on the road.

As if the presence of the Yankees and the return of the surprising Nats are not enough to capture the imaginate of Washington fans, developments have provided separate and lesser treats for local fandom.

Cascarella, Newsom Hurl.

The games today will provide Washington fans (1) their first glimpse of the sensational Joe DiMaggio; (2) their first occasion to cheer Ben Chapman in a Washington uniform; (3) Jake Powell's first appearance with the Yankees and (4) the unveiling of Joe Cascarella as a Washington pitcher.

Verily, the day promises to carry a wallop for Washington fandom.

Manager Bucky Harris, who shepherded his Nats back to Washington yesterday after the game with the Athletes was rained out, will confront the Yankees with Pitcher Joe Cascarella and Buck Newsom in the double bill. Cascarella, who will work the first game, will be opposed by Johnny Brocaca. It will be Newsom vs. Lefty Gomez in the second game, thus reviving memories of that 1-to-0 inaugural battle in which Newsom bested the Yankees' ace in April.

All Reserved Seats Sold.

In the face of a threat of rain, officials of the Washington Club anticipate the largest crowd in recent years at Griffith Stadium. Should the weather man relent, an overflow crowd necessitating ground rules, is in prospect. But with all reserved seats sold, only rain or thundershower violence will cause a postponement.

The Nats will be battling not only to beat the Yankees, but to preserve their fading hopes of figuring in the pennant race. With the Yanks 11 games ahead, the Nats can reinstate themselves in the pennant fight only by taking both games.

Bucky Harris will present the same line-up that carried the Nats so triumphantly through the West. With Buddy Myer still ailing, Ossie Bluege, the new sensation on the Washington club will be at second base. Bluege led the club at bat throughout the road trip with his imposing .389 figure for the 16 games.

With both clubs expressing satisfaction at the Jake Powell-Ben Chapman deal, Washington fans today will be provided with their first opportunity to glimpse for themselves the effects of the trade. Chapman, sensational in the field, at bat and on the bases since he joined the Nats, has been credited with inspiring the team's success in the West.

Tigers Subdue Browns, 9-5, In Slugfest

By the Associated Press.

St. Louis, July 3.—Roxie Lawson, Detroit Tiger hurler, had four jittery innings today, but he pulled through, aided by heavy slugging on the part of his mates, and the St. Louis Browns were subdued, 9 to 5.

The Browns scored three runs off him in the fourth, another in the fifth, their last in the seventh and had him mopping his brow in the ninth, but could not overcome an early lead the world champion's built up off Less Tietje.

Charley Gehringer, the veteran Tiger second baseman, whose play is so nearly perfect the Browns have dubbed him the "Detroit robot," got three hits, including a homer and a double. Jack Burns, traded by the Browns to the Tigers for Elon Hogsett when the champions needed a replacement for Hank Greenberg, also got three hits and was on base when Gehringer clouted the ball on the pavilion roof in right for his circuit smash in the first inning. Marvin Owen also hit safely three times.

Sammy West, of the Browns, performed the most sparkling fielding play of the game, in which four double plays were completed, by running 50 yards and lunging low to nab Lawson's hard drive in the third.

The victory gave the Tigers the first of a four-game series.

Funds Lacking, Oarsmen May Miss Olympics

Philadelphia, July 3 (AP).—Owing to a financial shortage, Henry Penn Burke, chairman of the American Olympic committee, announced today at the outset of the trials for single, double and four-oared events that all qualifiers might not be sent to Germany.

"We now have about $5,000 in the fund and we need $17,500 to send a full team of 35 men," Burke said.

3 U. S. Crews Advance In Henley Cup Races

Henley-on-Thames, England, July 3 (U.P.).—American schoolboy oarsmen today stroked their way toward an all-American Fourth of July final in the Thames Challenge Cup race of the Henley Regatta, when three United States crews advanced to the semifinal heats.

Eight-oared crews from the Kent School, of Kent, Conn.; Tabor Academy, of Marion, Mass., and Browne and Nichols, of Cambridge, Mass., won today's quarter-final tests against English boats.

But America was less fortunate in the semi-finals of the Grand Challenge Cup competition, premier event of the regatta. The Union Boat Club, of Boston, was eliminated by the powerful Leander Rowing Club, of London. This left Leander and the Zurich Rowing Club, of Switzerland, to battle it out tomorrow in the final.

Peso Wins $500 Rattlesnake Derby by Fang Amid Cries of 'Foul' After He Kills 3 at Post

By the Associated Press.

Carlsbad, N. Mex., July 3.—The "world's first rattlesnake derby" came close to being the last today as Peso, strictly a "dark horse," came through a free-for-all fight to win by a fang.

Amid the whirr of rattles and the shouts of "foul" the slender young diamond-back entry slid across the finish line to victory in the slow time of 6 minutes flat.

The triumph was worth $500 to Peso's backer, Jack Chaney, of El Paso, Tex. Merwin Campbell, racing steward, overruled protests of three owners that Peso had slain their entrants in the wild, writhing start.

Among the victims of the event today was Buttercup, a scaly 12-rattled veteran that had been a post-time favorite. Buttercup, who, his owner claimed, had a strain of blue-racer in its bloodlines, was mortally injured at the start and had to be exterminated. Whether he was the victim of the one-button colt Peso, could not be immediately determined.

Hundreds witnessed the race.

"He may not be any Man o' War or Cavalcade, as snakes go, but he's the fastest piece of fanged-flesh in these parts," praised Chaney.

Steward Campbell jumped into the racing arena at the start to disentangle the combatants—only to leap out as promptly.

The event was marked by the complete breakdown of broadcasting attempts. The unruly Peso, still full of fight, coiled and struck the "mike" with his fangs, shattering the delicate membrane.

Skyride Takes Charles Town Purse for Palumbo's 41st Win

Daily Double Pays Off $88 Mutuel

Pikor Also Rides 41st Winner; Feature Worth $7.40.

By Walter Haight.
A Staff Correspondent.

Charles Town, W. Va., July 3.—Skyride, one of the most consistent horses now campaigning here, made it four victories out of six starts this afternoon by winning the Shenandoah National Park Purse, the feature race of an interesting program. With Jockey Sammy Palumbo riding his forty-first winner of the meeting, Skyride made every post a winning one and came over the finish line a length in front of a driving Helen Bab. She barely was up in time to take the place money by a head from Vanvola.

Despite her record, the game daughter of Happy Argo paid a substantial $7.40 mutuel. Her time of 1:21 4-5 was well off the track record held by Scudder.

Palumbo was alert at the post and the echo of the starting bell had hardly ceased before Skyride was setting the pace. Vanvola, an ancient mare which has been showing good form of late, came up to press the claim of Skyride to the front honors.

Entering the stretch, Palumbo opened some daylight but in the stretch it was apparent that Helen Bab was to figure in the pay off. She circled horses to find racing room, but Palumbo shook up Skyride and the pair held sway to the end.

Despite his winner, Palumbo failed to shake off Lou Pikor for the local jockey championship. Pikor had to wait until the last race to ride his lone winner of the day. He had the satisfaction of riding the long shot, Fair Sun, to a three-quarter victory over Bright Spirits, an odds-on favorite, with Palumbo in the saddle.

Today's daily double paid an $88 mutuel and was the result of wins by At Dusk in the second race and Canynge in the third.

Despite the report of rains from nearby points, this vicinity escaped and the track was lightning fast throughout the afternoon.

A crowd of 4,500 was on hand.

MISS ADELINE, first away, shook off challenge from JUSTA PILGRIM to the stretch and then drew away gradually. JUSTA PILGRIM had to race on the outside of the winner all the way and held on gamely. WORTHFUL saved much ground entering the stretch and was next best. TULEYRIES RUBY went evenly, but could not reach contention. HENRY MAN had early speed and raced greenly.

AT DUSK rushed to the front at once, opened a good lead swinging for the stretch and easily held LUKE PHANTOM safe. The latter, away slowly, gained with a rush leaving the backstretch, but hung slightly at the end. MUDDY DAY rushed into contention at once, tired slightly under hard riding. GOLD TOKEN went forwardly most of the way and showed a good effort. FOOLS FOLLY was shuffled back directly after the break and came well at the end. ADA CRUZ had early speed.

Mitchell played some of he best tennis of his career to ist Ralph McElvenny, 7—9, 6—1, 6—2.

Difference in Styles.

It might explain the situation to y that Welsh gained the semiinals with powerful tennis, Latona ith fighting tennis and Mitchell ith inspired tennis. Of the three onquests, that of Tumbling Tony as easily the most spectacular.

Incidentally, after thrilling the pectators with his game comeback to beat Calvin, the bouncing basketball star came out on the courts and, paired with Lynch, gained the semifinals of the doubles with a 6—2, 6—0 rout of McCue and Lieut. Richard Dole.

Colvin was seeded No. 2 in the out-of-town list and lived up to his rating. Latona was seeded No. 4 in the Washington entry list and all but outclassed his rating. Without taking his sweat-shirt off the lithe playground instructor virtually swept the Baltimore star off the court as he rushed through the first set without losing a game.

Colvin tried to chop, drive and lob but to no avail. In the next set, Latona got off to a 4-2 lead, covering the court like a madman even to returning Colvin's constant fire of smashes from one of the best overheads the tournament has seen.

This same overhead, however, and some dazzling net play by the Baltimorean finally cracked Latona's defense and he dropped three games in a row to trail 4-5. Latona managed to hold his service for 5-5 but Colvin pounded his opponent's backhand severely, following to the net to put the ball away time and again to take the set.

Colvin Holds Lead.

In the last chapter, continuing the same tactics, the Marylander swarmed to a 4-2 lead. Both men were flashing brilliant tennis. Trailing two games to three, Latona finally took off his sweatshirt, only to lose the next game as Colvin's brilliant overhead and volleys continued to wreak havoc with his lobs and drives.

At this point, Latona staged his great comeback, winning the next two games without losing a point. After rolling up eight points in a row he had difficulty in winning the third straight game but a net-cord shot, a double-fault by Colvin and a brilliant passing shot finally gave him the 5-4 lead. He won the last game at love, out-classing Colvin completely with a bullet-like placement, an unreturnable smash and two drives which forced Colvin into error. The Baltimorean threw his racket toward the net after netting one of Latona's forcing drives for the last point.

It was a tense match and at one other time, Colvin had thrown a couple of balls high in the air after volleying outside.

In the meantime, on adjoining courts, Welsh and Mitchell were thumping aside McCue and McElvenny, respectively. Barney's power, either forehand or backhand, formed the crowning feature of his attack and his court coverage was comparable only with Latona's. McCue fought off four match points before volleying outside to end the battle.

Mitchell had leads of 6-5 and 5-4 in the first set against McElvenny only to drop it after 16 games. The former champ rolled up a flock of placements in the last two sets. He fired a continuous battery of passing shots which broke up McElvenny's renowned net game completely.

Canzoneri Title Bout Sought For Sarron

Ahearn Offers 135-Pound Champ $10,000 for Match Here.

Failing to land Lightweight Champion Tony Canzoneri for a bout with Howard Scott here because the title-holder had other engagements, Matchmaker Goldie Ahearn yesterday sought to bring the 135-pound championship within the grasp of Featherweight Champion Pete Sarron.

Canzoneri had been wired an offer of $10,000 for the Scott bout and the same offer was made for him to meet Sarron, who fights Bobby Dean in an overweight match here next Tuesday night.

Canzoneri was forced to refuse the Scott bout because he has been booked to meet Lew Ambers in New York for the Madison Square Garden. The date for that contest has tentatively been set at July 30.

In answer to a request filed by Scott's manager, Gabe Menendez, asking that Howard be given recognition in an elimination bout to be held to determine a new ruler in the lightweight class, the New York State Athletic Commission replied as follows:

"Referring to your letter of June 30 regarding lightweight championship situation, would say sanction has been given Canzoneri and Ambers for title meet. Therefore, no consideration can be given Howard Scott at this time."

Sarron has indicated a willingness to meet Canzoneri for the 135-pound bauble, if he gets a chance.

Agee Defends Title as 43 Vie Today in 10-Mile Race Here

Bill Agee, the marathon runner, who runs a chain of news stands in Baltimore, puts himself in his own papers again today when he defends his championship in the tenth annual District A. A. U.-Takoma Park Citizens 10-mile race, and conducted by the Department of Playgrounds.

A field of 43 runners from New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Newark, Alexandria, Washington and other places will start gunning for Agee's crown about 1 p. m. The race will start some 200 yards south of the Memorial Bridge, in Virginia, and traverse virtually the entire length of the District of Columbia, ending close to the Maryland line at the Takoma Park swimming pool.

Agee's chief rivals on this trek through the paved hills and dales of Washington will be Mel Porter, the dogged New Yorker, representing the German-American A. C. Larry Cece of the same club, Phil Jackelski, of Baltimore, and Bill Wilson, of Philadelphia, and Joe Kleinerman, of the German-American A. C.

The German-American A. C., incidentally, is the defending champion in the battle for the team honors. With Porter, Kleinerman and Cece carrying its colors, the New Yorkers are favored to retain the title despite the threat of Agee's Stonwall Democratic Club, of Baltimore; the Passon A. C., of Philadelphia; the Washington Track and Field Club and the Southeast Businessmen's Association, of Washington.

The latter is a new threat to win the new trophy donated by the District A. A. U. to be given to the first Washington team to finish.

Agee has notified officials that he is out to break his own record for the race this year. He has won the event nine of the ten times it has been held. The race is the oldest event of its kind to be held in Washington annually without a break.

George Shorb, the first Washingtonian to finish last year, will lead the Washington Track and Field team's challenge to the new Southeast Businessmen's contingent.

Johnston, Madison Square Garden matchmaker, announced today that Tony Canzoneri, lightweight champion, and Jimmy McLarnin, former welterweight king, have agreed to a 15-round return bout in the Garden's Long Island City bowl, August 27. Canzoneri defeated the Vancouver Irishman in a spectacular 15-rounder in the Garden last May.

Johnston also said that he had talked with Max Baer, now barnstorming in Texas, and that Baer would come to New York late in August to discuss a fight with Jack Sharkey, of Boston.

Owens Heads Crack Field in Today's Finals

Princeton, N. J., July 3 (AP).—America's foremost track and field talent, most of them Olympic-bound, answered the roll call today in preparation for the senior National A. A. U. championships, to be held at Palmer Stadium tomorrow afternoon.

Heading the list of record-smashers on the title program is Jesse Owens, Ohio State's one-man track team, who will compete in the 100-meter dash and broad jump. Owens was beaten in both events last year at Lincoln, where his winning streak was broken by Eulace Peacock, Temple University Negro. Peacock is entered in both events tomorrow, but is still handicapped by an injured leg tendon.

Other record busters ready to start include Forrest (Spec) Towns, Georgia High hurdler; Ken Carpenter, of Southern California, in the discus; Archie Williams, California Negro, in the 400-meter run, and Glenn Hardin, in the 400-meter hurdles.

Archie San Romani, national collegiate A. A. 1,500-meter champion from Emporia, Kans., will challenge the famous triumvirate of Glenn Cunningham, Bill Bonthron and Gene Venzke in the "metric mile." San Romani has impressed observers as a potential Olympian, but lacks the experience of his noted rivals.

Joe Louis Fit, Cheerful, Ready And Anxious to Fight Again

By the Associated Press.

New York, July 3.—Joe Louis, completely mended in both mind and body, is ready to strike out along the comeback trail he hopes will lead again to the top of the heavyweight division.

The 22-year-old Detroit Negro, once known as the "The Brown Bomber" and the "Dark Menace" among other things, paid a hurried visit to New York today to appear on a radio program and discuss plans for an August come-back bout with Promoter Mike Jacobs.

Belted back into the second flight by Max Schmeling only two weeks ago, Louis seemed surprisingly fit and cheerful.

His face, cut and badly swollen from Schmeling's pulverizing rights, is normal again and Louis' sprained thumbs give him no more trouble.

Ready in Two Weeks.

He says he'll be ready to fight in two weeks and the sooner Jacobs throws him in there, the better he'll like it.

Just who will be selected as Joe's next opponent is problematical. Max Baer, the former champ, would be the No. 1 choice, but Baer wants no part of Louis unless he is guaranteed at least $150,000.

Leroy Haynes, Philadelphia Negro, also is being considered, as are Al Ettore, who holds three decisions over Haynes and Phil Brubaker, the youngster from the Pacific Coast.

Personally, Joe would prefer a return go with Schmeling, but he'll not ask for this until the German gets his merited crack at Jimmy Braddock's title.

"I'm not going to stand in his way, much as I'd like to fight him again right now," Louis said. "He gave me a good licking and he's earned his chance at the championship. After he's had it, I'll go after him."

Has Rested.

Since the Schmeling battle, Louis has been resting up on the farm of Julian Black, one of his managers, near Stevensville, Mich. He'll be joined there next Monday by Trainer Jack Blackburn and begin light training.

Without once mentioning his injured hands, the colored boy explained the Schmeling rout with the simple statement that he had underrated Max's ability.

"I just got careless," he said. "It won't happen again. I'm going to prepare for my future bouts just as though the title was at stake in every one of them."

John Roxborough, another manager, who accompanied Joe here, said the Schmeling reverse did Joe a lot of good.

"He always wanted to fight," Roxborough said, "but never as badly as he does now. He determined to show his friends he's just as good as they thought he was."

Joe was asked if he had seen pictures of the fight.

"No, suh," he replied. "I saw all of that fight I wanted to that night."

BOBBY DEAN.

By Bill McCormick.

Although far from the Donald Dare type of hero of the old blood and thunder mellerdrammers, Bobby Dean actually started fighting to save the old homestead.

Only it wasn't a homestead that was mortgaged, it was a corner grocery store and the little guy who fights Featherweight Champion Pete Sarron at Griffith Stadium next Tuesday night didn't come galloping into the scene just in time to keep his aged parents from being tossed out into the crooel, cold woild. He labored long and hard at the ring game, paying off the mortgage bit by bit in a manner not at all spectacular.

It seems that Dean, who was christened Roberto Caesar, had an older brother, one Ernie Caesar, who had been a very first-class lightweight. What, with stock market crashes and such, the Caesar finances weren't nearly what they once had been.

They all did all right for a while, however, because Pappa Caesar, with true Italian foresight, had purchased a corner grocery store, with living quarters upstairs. Even a large family can live through a depression if they have their own grocery store, so the Caesars did all right until the real estate company reminded Papa Caesar that he had overlooked one minor detail—a mortgage on the palace of the Caesars.

Had Suppressed Desire.

That's where Bobby stepped in. He was just 20, and since the days when brother Ernie was campaigning at top speed, he had nursed a secret desire to become a pug. Mama and Papa Caesar objected violently, but when Bobby pointed out that Ernie hadn't done so badly and that another Italian lad, Tony Canzoneri, had done even better in the ring, they relented.

Thus was Bobby Dean started on a career which may carry him places, and anyway has given him enough money to pay off the mortgage. At the first, Bobby, who is a southpaw, was a knockout artist. He had a string of 35 knockouts, but then as he got better, competition got better—and he learned to box to keep from getting stopped himself.

At this stage in his career, he started beating such fighters as Jackie Wilson, Jimmy Thomas, Eddie Burl (who holds a win over and draw with Sarron), Frankie Wolfram, Pete DeGrasse and Roger Bernard.

In Steps Laken.

One Jack Laken, who is a pretty good guy at picking up unknown prospects and making something of them, saw Dean in action and immediately offered his brother—who then managed him—$1,000 for a half-interest. Ernie figured, what with his love of traveling and many contacts, Bobby would do much better if Jack got the half-interest—so he sold.

Laken, who has brought some of the better fighters here, immediately shot Dean in against Eddie Burl—and Dean won impressively. Next came one Nick LaPatina, a stablemate of Eddie Mader's, and Bobby did an artistic job of spanking him.

Next on the list was one Sammy Angott, who had just finished beating the highly regarded Leonard Del Genio, a leading lightweight contender. To the surprise of everyone, but Laken and Dean, Bobby beat him too. All these fights were in Washington.

Bobby also has fought twice in Lancaster for Laken, beating Earl Fredericks, a good local lad, both times out. He is a natural featherweight, but has been forced to fight lightweights because he is too good for most 126-pounders.

When Sarron agreed to fight here before going West, his manager, Jimmy Erwin, insisted that the best man available be sought. That is a policy he is using for all of Pete's nontitle bouts. After many conferences, Dean was selected as the outstanding featherweight—and so we have next Tuesday night's fight, which should be a thing of beauty.

Drought, Labor Clouds Darken Business Sky

Crop Damage Will Reduce Purchasing Power of Farmers.

New York, July 3.—In its weekly summary of the general business situation, the Standard Statistics Co. says today:

"Continuing drought conditions in the Northwest and growing labor unrest have tended to cloud an otherwise bright business picture.

"There have been only scattered rains in the dry areas recently, with the result that further deterioration in crops doubtless has taken place. Not only has the spring wheat crop been severely damaged, but the small grains (oats, rye and barley) have been adversely affected, and yields will be well below earlier expectations. The corn crop likewise has started off poorly, although final harvest of this grain will depend largely upon the weather this summer.

"Complaints of poor pasturage also have been received. Consequently, the flow of milk has been reduced and raw milk prices have firmed. In fact, quotations for all dairy products have strengthened in reflection of the prospective lower supplies.

"The drought situation at the moment is serious, and although it is not nearly so widespread as in 1934, it will have the effect of reducing the purchasing power of a large number of individual farmers, even though Federal relief will be forthcoming."

Stock Trading Shrinks Under Margin Rules

Reports From 420 Member Firms Submitted by N. Y. Stock Exchange.

By the Associated Press.

New York, July 3.—Activities of large scale stock market operators have been sharply curtailed by present Federal Reserve Board margin requirements, according to a study of the New York Stock Exchange's margin trading survey released last night.

The shrinkage of dealings on the part of Wall Street's big gun traders has resulted in less margin business for the account of the "small fry" who in former years essayed to ride on the market waves created by heavy commitments, observers said the compilation showed.

The figures, gathered from 420 stock exchange firms and forwarded to the Federal Reserve Board at Washington, indicated that on May 29, April 30 and March 31, between 29 and 39.4 per cent of margin accounts of customers of member houses were "restricted."

Under the regulations of the Reserve Board "restricted" accounts are those on which the original 55 per cent customer's ownership of stock has not been maintained. Holders of these accounts, according to the rules, are not permitted to make net cash withdrawals or additional stock commitments.

Chicago Bank Pays RFC Full Amount

Chicago, July 3 (AP).—A check for $15,000,000 was tossed across a counter today and the First National Bank of Chicago had bought back the last block of shares of preferred stock it issued to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in January, 1934.

The transaction, in which bank officials carried the check to the Federal Reserve Bank of Chicago, financial agent for the RFC, and brought back certificates for 150,000 shares of preferred, meant that the First National became the first large bank in the Nation to "pay off" the Government agency.

The Market

By Carlton A. Shively, A Special Correspondent.

Steel, Motor and Farm Implement Shares Give Market Firmer Tone.

New York, July 3.—Stocks and bonds ended the short week with a firm tone. Turnover in stocks was around a million shares. Price movements were not uniformly toward higher levels, but advances were in the majority. Grains met profit taking on less alarming crop news. September wheat dropped ⅝ of a cent a bushel to 101⅝ cents.

In stocks, General Motors accounted for 10 per cent of the trading of the first three hours. It reached its best price since late in April in rising more than a point. Turnover in Chrysler was reduced, but the price hardened a point. Steel shares recovered 1 to 2 points, on the speculative idea that prices had gone down as far as mere shivering over a strike ought to send them. Motor accessories glistened.

The aviation group came forward with sharp gains. Wright climbed 8 points. Douglas hardened 2 points. Farm implements, which fell yesterday, recovered 1 to 3 points as wheat dropped on reports of rain in the dry wheat belt. Rails worked moderately higher. Much better prices were paid for members of the Van Sweringen group. Utilities were well liked, especially Standard Gas & Electric Power issues.

Some individual movements drew attention. Checker Cab, under inquiry because of its sharp rise a short time ago, sold for the first time in nearly two weeks and dropped 7½ points. Homestake Mining broke a couple of dozen points on a few sales. United States Smelting, the silver stock, lost more than 4 points to find itself in the poorest position in three years. Shares of the coal companies scraped bottom. American fell 4 points. Zenith, Owens Glass, Manville and Greyhound were trundled up 1 to 4 points.

The week's statement of the Federal Reserve System, beyond showing further progress toward centralization of the system, suggested only a sustained period of easy money. Excess reserves jumped under the spur of the bonus payments and gold imports. Foreign currencies were fairly active. Gold currencies were firm.

Disturbances.

Stocks have lost a little ground this week—not enough to upset prevailing opinion that prices will finish the year at higher levels and that business activity will increase in the autumn, but enough to serve as a reminder of unfavorable possibilities. The steel share section has had to bear up under the threat of a widespread strike in the industry as a result of attempts of union labor to end the open-shop era in steel. The operating rate for the steel mills this week stepped up sharply, but that was attributed to fear of trouble later on.

Another factor in the steel situation which scarcely is a favorable one is the plain indication that the Labor Department of the Government is inclined to back up any efforts of the unions to organize the steel company employes. Such an attitude of partiality will tend to bring nearer the possibility of strikes. A tie-up strike in steel would be a major factor in depressing business, but the markets probably are looking too darkly at the prospect.

The week's other contribution to the bearish side was renewed emphasis placed on drought damage. Crop condition always is difficult to determine with accuracy, damage reports invariably are exaggerated and the effect of a short production usually is complicated with too many other developments to be readily traced. Wheat and other grain prices this week have soared to the best of the season and the Government has seized that obvious excuse to promise bonus benefits along with increased planting. All the winter wheat and much of the spring wheat already is made, and much can happen to bring out a corn crop.

Reserve Statement.

Despite an outflow of $77,000,000 of currency in the week of July 1 the Reserve Bank statements discloses a rise of $281,000,000 in member bank reserve balances, the product of a $345,000,000 net disbursement of Government funds on soldier bonus account. Excess reserves jumped $230,000,000 in the week to $2,670,000,000. In connection with the shuffling of Government securities so as to give individual Federal Reserve banks more earning assets the board has discontinued reporting the reserve ratios of the individual regional banks, explaining that such ratios do not reflect conditions in the several districts because most of the earning assets consist of Government securities.

Brokers' Loans.

The further sharp drop in brokers' loans, shown yesterday afternoon by the Federal Reserve Board, was consistent with the general trend in the stock market, where most of the buying is of an investment character and for cash. Restricted accounts at least are helping to keep down the loan total.

State Bank Reports.

In calling for statements of condition of State chartered banks as of June 30, the State banking department today issued an explanatory statement respecting its efforts to achieve uniformity of State and Federal agency forms, so that a State chartered bank could make one published statement suffice for all purposes. It appears that the Federal Reserve Board also is working upon uniformity plans respecting condition reports prescribed by Federal agencies. It is not yet ready to work out plans for uniformity with this State. The June 30 condition reports must be rendered to this State in the usual way, but the banks are assured of a change before the next condition report is requested.

Drought.

Even those whom some people begin to suspect as drought propagandists could not supress news of actual rainfall in the so-called drought areas; and consequently grain prices tumbled a bit. Drought dangers usually are exaggerated, and this time the agricultural department seems to have enjoyed making our flesh creep—possibly to cover a rise in farm imports and a jump in bonus payments to the farmers in a limited and politically uncertain area. The only States in which all hands round agree really need rain (compared with an Eastern State, any Western State needs rain all the time) are the Dakotas and possibly Montana and Minnesota. Montana is negligible as an agricultural producer anyhow, Iowa, which seems to be fairly well off, can outproduce Minnesota, and the wheat that the Dakotas might have produced, but which has been plowed under by Wallace, won't be hurt much by weather from this time on. Crops will be small this year in grains, the result of several years of insufficient moisture and of systematic removal of millions of acres from efficient production, but the harvest probably won't be much if any under that of last year.

Call Reveals Deposit Drop In Washington

Total of 306.4 Million on June 30 Is 3.5 Million Under March Peak.

Deposits of the 22 Washington banks at the end of the half year were $306,432,644.78 according to figures submitted yesterday in response to a call by Comptroller of the Currency J. F. O'Connor for the June 30 condition of all national banks in the country and all banks in the District of Columbia.

The total compares with record high deposits of $310,007,305.89 reported on March 4 for the previous call, a drop of $3,574,661.11. Bank officers said that deposits were running ahead of the March peak until June when substantial withdrawals were made for tax purposes.

Building Boom Sets a Record In Montgomery

Election Judges Named; New Civic Group Elects R. E. L. Smith.

Building construction in Montgomery County during the first six months of this year broke all records, E. J. Gray, county building inspector, reported yesterday. Building for the half-year ending June 30 was approximately $250,000 greater than for the same period last year, which was the largest in the county's history, he said.

New Home construction for this period totals $3,112,857 of which $1,496,730 was in the western suburban district,$1,348,892 in the eastern suburban district, $160,000 in the town of Takoma Park, and $107,235 in the rural sections north of the metropolitan district.

Applications for permits are being filed steadily in a volume that led Gray to predict that the total for this year would approach $8,000,000, by far the greatest building boom the county has ever seen. This figure may be exceeded, he said, if the proposed $500 000 apartment project of the Blair Management Corporation at Sixteenth street and the East-West highway is built this year. Preliminary plans have been approved by the Federal Housing Administration.

Most of the permits issued were for the construction of individual homes. A total of 439 permits have been issued in the western suburban district and 337 permits in the eastern district, while 44 have been issued in the rural areas and 40 in Takoma Park.

He graduated from Virginia Military Institute and later from the Maryland School of Pharmacy at Baltimore. Before coming to Washington he practiced pharmacy in Richmond and Lexington.

His wife, Mrs. Emma Boxwell McCorkle, survives.

Takoma Child, Shot By Platmate, Better

Condition of 10-year-old Jean Patton, seriously wounded when she was shot accidentally two days ago in Takoma Park, Md., was reported somewhat improved by physicians at Children's Hospital, where she is a patient, last night.

The child, whose home is in Washington, Pa., had been visiting a sister here at the time of the mishap. She is staging a courageous fight to rally from the wound inflicted in her abdomen by a .22 caliber bullet from a rifle.

She was shot when Herbert Hall, also 10, of Takoma Park, accidentally pulled the trigger of the gun as he was reloading it for a playmate.

Youth Leader Demands Help With U. S. Cash

Division of Money Spent on 'Militarization' Is Asked at Parley.

By the Associated Press.

Cleveland, July 3.—Speaking before 1,500 delegates to the third American Youth Congress, William W. Hinckley, national chairman, demanded tonight diversion of Federal money now used for "increased militarization of youth" to the relief of unemployed youth.

The delegates, representing an estimated 3,000,000 youths between 16 and 25 years of age in the United States, Canada and Mexico, cheered as Hinckley blasted "reactionary powers" that find thought "dangerous."

"One third of the population of a whole generation is out of school and out of work," Hinckley said. "The present National Youth Administration is not adequate. Only a bill similar to the American Youth act can give our present young people an adequate living wage."

Messages from President Roosevelt and from Norman Thomas, Socialist candidate for President, to Hinckley were read at the meeting.

By the Associated Press.

Cleveland, July 3.—William W. Hinckley, national chairman of the American Youth Congress, demanded tonight that the Government provide jobs for the idle young men and women of the country, whose number he estimated at from 5,000,000 to 8,000,000.

"If the country doesn't face this most important problem as it should," Hinckley said, "we may see our youth listening to the first skillful demagogue to appeal to them, and be swept into a Fascist youth movement dedicated to violence."

Hinckley spoke as hundreds of young men and women prepared for a meeting at Public Hall in which delegates to the congress will express their convictions concerning unemployment, relief and social problems of youth.

The congress, Hinckley said, supports the American youth act, which asks jobs for young people at union wages on Government projects.

Approximately 2,500 delegates are expected here for the congress, which will continue through Sunday.

Among the speakers will be Rose Troiano, chairman of the national council, industrial department of the Y. W. C. A.; Dr. Martin Harvey, chairman of the Christian youth council of North America; Edwin Mitchell, chairman of the youth committee of the Southern Tenant Farmers Union, and Ben Fischer, national secretary of the Young People's Socialist League.

Girl Slashes Man's Arm To Drain Snake Poison

Mary Parker, 18-year-old senior at Roosevelt High School, was credited yesterday with saving the life of Richard Owens, 24, Baltimore magazine salesman.

She volunteered to cut open his arm with a razor when he appeared at a Castlemans Ferry, Va., dance hall and said that a copperhead snake had bitten him while he was picking berries nearby. Dr. Frank E. Tappan, Berryville, Va., physician, who later treated Owens, said the latter owed his life to the girl's treatment. Mary lives at 7525 Georgia avenue northwest.

Rites Planned By Dissenting Presbyterians

New Denomination Seeks to Establish Unit of Faith Here.

A group, planning a new Presbyterian Church for Washington, met for its first service last night in the Bible Institute of Washington, 1316 Vermont avenue northwest.

The proposed church will be under the jurisdiction of the organization that recently broke away from the Presbyterian Church of the United States of America, according to the Rev. Leslie W. Sloat, organizer.

The new denomination, formed by Dr. J. Gresham Machen, of Philadelphia, is known as the Presbyterian Church of America.

Regular Service Tomorrow.

Last night's meeting, a prayer service, is preliminary to the opening of regular services tomorrow, Sloat said. He will conduct services in the Institute at 4 p. m. tomorrow. Later morning as well as evening services may be scheduled for Sundays, he said.

Sloat, who plans to stay in Washington for two or three months while the new parish is being organized, is a former pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of the U. S. A., at Ridgeway, N. J.

He joined Dr. Mackey in the formation of the new organization at a meeting June 11 in Philadelphia.

Followed Assembly.

That session followed closely the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of the U. S. A., at which Dr. Gresham and seven other leaders were expelled from the denomination.

Dr. Machen is the first moderator of the new order, which sets forth that "the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments are the word of God, the only infallible rule of faith and practice."

Sloat expects to develop wider interest in the organization during his stay here. He said he will call a meeting early in August if there is enough interest to justify establishing a permanent church body.

New Star Celebrates Fourth With Celestial Fireworks Show

Nova Cephei, the once faint, but now bright star which made its debut on June 18, is presenting an unusual display of erupting gases, astronomers at the Mount Wilson Observatory of the Carnegie Institution of Washington announced last night.

It was as though, despite the 2,800 light years it is removed from the earth, the exploding star were transmitting a Fourth of July message to the United States.

Novae are not new stars in any sense except that a faint, inconspicuous star, through some catastrophic disturbance of unknown origin, suddenly increases enormously in brightness and thus forces itself on the attention of the astronomer. Quickly reaching a maximum, its light then slowly fades, with many minor fluctuations, during an interval of weeks or months.

Nova Cephei is probably to be identified with a star of about the sixteenth magnitude shown on a photograph taken at the Mount Wilson Observatory in 1922. Since at maximum the nova was a little brighter than the third magnitude and easily visible to the naked eye, the outburst probably represents a sudden increase of 100,000 fold or more in the light.

Observed with the spectroscope, the nova showed the characteristic outrush of gases, apparently in the form of a rapidly expanding shell, moving outward on June 18 at the rate of about 700 miles per second. An unusual feature is the steady increase in the velocity, which by June 24 had doubled in amount.

On June 20 a second component appeared in the broad and widely displaced absorption lines of the spectrum, indicating the presence of a second shell expanding at the rate of nearly 1,700 miles per second. This velocity also has steadily increased and on June 24 was about 2,100 miles per second, the largest thus far measured in any nova.

The light of the nova is now about two magnitudes fainter than at maximum.

Judged by the spectral lines of ionized calcium, which are caused by calcium gas scattered throughout space betwen the stars, the distance of the nova is of the order of 2,800 light years. To have been as bright as the third magnitude, at maximum the star must have been more than 100,000 times as luminous as the sun.

Rev. Dr. Smith Off For South After Resigning

St. Thomas' Pastor Quits After 34 Years in Episcopal Post.

The Rev. Dr. C. Ernest Smith, for 34 years rector of St. Thomas' Episcopal Church, 1772 Church street northwest, last week left for the South after resigning.

Dr. Smith submitted his resignation in May, asking that it become effective at the end of that month. He was persuaded to remain until the end of June. After returning from the South he will spend the summer in New Hampshire, returning in the fall to make his permanent home in Washington.

The rector was born in England and received his education there. His theological training was at St. Augustine's College, Canterbury. He was graduated with B. A. honors from University College, Durham University. He holds honorary degrees from many colleges.

On November 1, 1902, he became rector of St. Thomas' Church. During this long rectorship a $72,000 debt was paid off, the number of communicants was doubled, a rectory built and numerous other improvements were made.

In tendering his resignation Dr. Smith said:

"No man could have had a more desirable field of work than the rector has had, combined with a loyalty hardly ever disturbed extending over many years. He trusts that God will abundantly bless the work of his successor."

No announcement of his successor has been made.

Returning Partner's Lead.

The automatic return of partner's opening lead, for no better reason than that "since he led it he must know what he's doing," is one of the most glaring faults of average and lesser players. An opening lead, like every other play, should be given careful consideration, but most decidedly should not be held in awe and veneration as a sacred thing. Consider how easily the contract in today's hand could have been defeated if East had not been mired in the fallacy, "always return partner's opening lead."

The bidding:
North	East	South	West
1 spade	Pass	2 diamonds	Pass
2 hearts	Pass	2 no trump	Pass
3 hearts	Pass	3 no trump	Pass
Pass	Pass

The opponents having bid every suit except clubs, West opened the deuce of that suit. East won with the ace and returned the five spot. Declarer, with a sigh of relief, went up with the king and cashed the queen, discarding dummy's ace and king of diamonds. He then rattled off the five card diamond suit and, with only two tricks needed for his contract, disdained the heart finesse to cash the ace and king.

East should have hung his head in shame. South's insistence on no trump certainly indicated strength in the unbid suit, clubs, and besides, there was a way of finding out the correct line of defense. East should have laid down the spade king and watched closely for his partner's follow suit card. If it were a low one the club then could be returned. But if West signaled with a high spade, which he would have done, playing the nine spot, the defense would have become clear. East-West merely would have to cash their three top spades and then lock dummy in with a diamond. If declarer had the queen of hearts no defense could avail, but if West had that card doubly guarded he would be certain to make it. Thus five tricks would have gone to the defenders by the surprisingly simple measure of keeping declarer out of his own hand.

On the Air Today

If someone were to insist that I name the program that stood out above all others, one entitled to an unqualified rating as the No. 1 show on the air today—I'd find myself in a terrible predicament. Somehow air entertainment isn't judged so easily. There are too many types of shows. It would not be difficult to select 10 or even five leaders; but getting it down to one would present its problems.

It all comes to mind because Shannon Allen and I were discussing the Crosby show yesterday. Allen, who guides the production work for NBC here, has been an ardent admirer of Crosby since the program first came on the air; and a devoted listener.

And I admit that I have found the crooning flicker star's programs very easily taken despite the formidable two hours immediately preceeding—Vallee's "Varieties" and "Showboat." In fact, I would not hesitate to select Crosby's show, of the three, if my evening permitted hearing only one.

This week's Crosby hour was particularly good feet-on-the-table discussion material because he presented Frank Morgan. Now Morgan may be just another movie celebrity to you, but to Allen he was the answer to that ever-present question: Where can we get a new personality to head up this new program?

Morgan Is a Find.

Morgan has that something that seems to come right out of the radiospeaker and make you feel swell. You feel as though you like him, like what he's going to say. In fact, he seemed to register far more definitely and appealingly via radio than in his screen work—and that's saying a good deal in behalf of the endowments of any man who has attained a reputation such as his.

If Frank Morgan is open to bargaining on an air contract, some producer could do well by talking it over with him before the fall season gets too far advanced in its preparations.

Further, I like Crosby's lazy, personal manner of handling his guest performers (which has improved appreciably since the series first opened). I love the way he breaks through the conventional crust of dignity that usually identifies many of his long-haired artists-guests and makes human beings of them.

I guess I like Crosby's show pretty well.

Short story: Arthur Godfrey (about 8 a. m.) reports to his Sun Dial audience that Mr. So-and-so, in the corporation counsel's office, has just lost a valuable dog—an Irish setter. At precisely that hour one of Mr. Godfrey's ardent fans is driving to his work downtown by way of Sixteenth street and hears the story of the dog through his car radio. Hearing the announcement he unconsciously looks about for dogs and spots one Irish setter answering the description. Stops; communes with dog. Mr. So-and-so notified. Gets his dog back. Finis.
